10 MORE FACTS

1. The 10 facts which we listed previously prove that a record that has never been touched is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's for the passing year, 1924-25.

2. For 1925-26 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with its already famous Quality 52 has established again its superiority.

3. Among the big star names in The Quality 52 are: LILLIAN GISH, LON CHANEY, MARION DAVIES, JOHN GILBERT, BUSTER KEATON, RAMON NOVARRO, MAE MURRAY, NORMA SHEARER, JACKIE COOGAN, ELEANOR BOARDMAN, AILEEN PRINGLE, PAULINE STARKE, CONWAY TEARLE, CLAIRE WINDSOR, CONRAD NAGEL, MAE BUSCH, LEW CODY, and many others.

4. The directors of The Quality 52 are the following: REX INGRAM, FRED NIBLO, VICTOR SEASTROM, MARSHALL NEILAN, ERICH VON STROHEIM, TOD BROWNING, HOBART HENLEY, FRANK BORZAGE, KING VIDOR, RUPERT HUGHES, MONTA BELL, ROBERT Z. LEONARD, W. CHRISTY CABANNE, JACK CONWAY, ALF GOULDING, JOSEF VON STERNBERG, EDMUND GOULDING, BENJAMIN CHRISTIANSON, WILLIAM WELLMAN, AL RABOCH, and more.

5. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has one of the most important companies of permanent players in the world, grooming the box-office stars of Tomorrow. Watch for SALLY O'NEILL, KATHLEEN KEY, GEORGE K. ARTHUR, PAULETTE DUVAL among others.

6. A few celebrated novels among The Quality 52: Blasco Ibanez' "MARE NOSTRUM," "THE TEMPTRESS," "THE TORRENT;" Sabatini's "BARDELYS THE MAGNIFICENT;" Peter B. Kyne's "NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET;" Selma Lagerlof's world-prize novel "THE TOWER OF LIES:" Rupert Hughes' "MONEY TALKS!" and "HOW DARE YOU!" Elinor Glyn's "THE REASON WHY;" and many others.

7. A few stage plays in The Quality 52: "THE MERRY WIDOW," "SALLY, IRENE AND MARY," "BUDDIES," "THE CIRCLE," "LIGHTS OF NEW YORK," from "Merry Wives of Gotham." Laurence Stallings, author of "What Price Glory" contributes "THE BIG PARADE;" Samuel Shipman, "A SLAVE OF FASHION," "SUN UP," "AN EXCHANGE OF WIVES." And a lot more!

8. Showmanship ideas. Erté's breath-taking gowns will soon be the sensation of all audiences. Plus Technicolor Sequences in many of The Quality 52. And other box-office angles.

9. THE TRANSCONTINENTAL TRACKLESS TRAIN now en route from Coast to Coast is just one of the promotion ideas. Add publicity and advertising of Cosmopolitan productions.

10. The studio organization, headed by Louis B. Mayer and his associates Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf, prove again in The Quality 52 a knowledge of what exhibitors want to get the crowds.

ROARING RAILS: This, in my estimation was better than "The Covered Wagon", and had many people tell me that they thought so. It is by far the best picture Carey ever made. The kid, Frankie Darro, can't be beat.
F. J. O'Hara, Community Theatre, Elgin, Neb. (Exhibitors Herald)

TIGER THOMPSON: Take it from me, if you haven't bought this series, grab them quick. This is my third one, and they can't be beat. I know.
Dave Walsh, Little Hippodrome Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. (M. P. World)

THE LIGHTNING RIDER: Very fine picture and appealed to all. Stromberg seems to know the type of picture for Carey.
H. S. Robbins, Robinhood Theatre, Grand Haven, Mich. (Exhibitors Herald)

THE FLAMING FORTIES: People, if you like outdoor pictures with thrills aplenty, buy this and step on it. It's a real picture. Pleased all my patrons. Give us more like it.
Price McCall, Lyric Theatre, Mena, Ark. (Exhibitors Herald)

Here's the real low-down. In the final check-up compiled by Motion Picture News, the Harry Carey series of deluxe action dramas gets highest average rating of 84% over a period of six months. Each one has proved a veritable gold mine for exhibitors. Backed by the keen showmanship of Hunt Stromberg and his unusual ability to gauge the public taste, Harry Carey has been established as one of the two

THE FLAMING FORTIES: As usual Harry Carey gives us another excellent western that is good enough for any house. Carey's pictures can always be depended upon for big stories and the absolute absence of the absurdities usually found in westerns. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent for masses.
J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre, Battle Creek, Iowa (Exhibitors Herald)

ROARING RAILS: Big business nights. Harey Carey, broncho rider, thrills 'em as pilot of locomotive, with forest fires and other spectacular and sensational stunts, pleasing the patrons immensely.
Herman Wahn, State Street Theatre, Trenton, N. J. (The Exhibitor)

THE FLAMING FORTIES: Believe Harry gets better in every picture. They sure are putting him in real pictures.
W. A. Clark, Jr., Castle Theatre, Havana, Ill. (Exhibitors Herald)

THE NIGHT HAWK: Carey's excellent work in this picture means a cleanup for the rest of the series. Buy this set. You can't go wrong and the price is right.
A. Sosnosky, Colonial Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D. (Amusements)

SOFT SHOES: I believe this one made the best hit of the series; has comedy, a good story, good direction and Harry handles the comedy to good advantage. Can recommend this series to any exhibitor. (Have bought the new series).
E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine (M. P. World)

THE NIGHT HAWK: These Harry Carey pictures are A-1 from every standpoint. Very good entertainment that pleases 95 per cent, and you don't have to put the second mortgage on your theatre to buy 'em either.
J. E. Ridgeway, Lyric Theatre, Coon Rapids, Iowa (Exhibitors Herald)

BEYOND THE BORDER: One of the best that he ever made and went over good here. Has plenty of good comedy in it. Several fights and everything that makes a real snappy picture.
Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico (M. P. World)

ROARING RAILS: Corking good picture. Pleased both young and old. Used toy train in lobby and windows and certainly helped. Use it. It's good.
Walter Suckno, Regent Theatre, Albany, N. Y. (Exhibitors Herald)

Harry Carey a great western star

RATES HIGHEST OFFICE

greatest western stars of the screen and a consistent, sure-fire performer at the ticket window. In the new series, Stromberg has put forth every effort to eclipse his previous offerings, and I confidently predict that the forthcoming line-up of Carey's for release through Producers Distributing Corporation will set new high marks for fast-moving, seat-selling productions.

Charles R. Rogers

FORTHCOMING SERIES

"The Valley of Fear"

"The Man From Red Gulch"

"Roaring River"

"The Prairie Pirate"

THE LIGHTNING RIDER: These Carey's Producers are giving us are the real stuff. Keep it up.
Lloyd Hollenback, Colonial Theatre, Paul, Idaho (Exhibitors Herald)

BEYOND THE BORDER: Another knockout for Carey. Story, star and direction are above criticism. These Careys are very dependable and any one can boost them. Appeal ninety per cent.
Frank G. Wotten, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hamp. (M. P. World)

SOFT SHOES: Here's a good picture. Be sure and play it. Let's have Carey make eight a year instead of four. If it's a Harry Carey, it's good.
Harry Van Noy, Riviera Theatre, Anderson, Ind. (Exhibitors Herald)

TIGER THOMPSON: All Carey features from Producers Distributing are very good and can be bought right. This one will please anywhere.
H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn. (Amusements)

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXXII NEW YORK, JULY 4, 1925 NO. 1

The New Situation

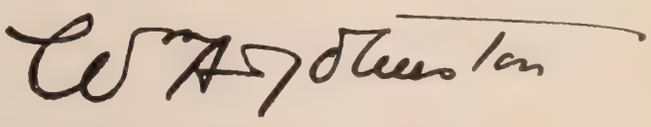
WITH the purchase of chain after chain of theatres by Famous Players, and with the ready absorption by the public of a large block of stock, obviously issued for still further purchases, it is easy, without any advice whatever on the subject, to speculate pretty safely as to this concern's objective. That, apparently, is the ownership of a fleet of theatres so large as to provide readily for production cost.

Selling, then, to these theatres—by Famous Players—becomes automatic; distribution is physical only; the real selling effort of the company's distributing forces will probably take the form of franchise selling of Famous product to other theatres.

By the same token the independent producer—or whoever he is—of features, comedies, news reel, long and short subjects in general, can also dispose of this product to this large group of theatres—with a stroke of the pen and without selling cost. He can permit Famous or some other distributor to extend the distribution of his pictures to the other theatres.

"Other theatres" is a broad term. It includes theatres owned or controlled by First National, Loew (owning Metro-Goldwyn), Universal, Fox, Warners, and theatres still further to be acquired by these concerns; vaudeville theatres which, by the way, are destined to become more of a factor in the picture field; all the more important houses that may continue to fly the independent flag; and, then, the large army of small theatres in small communities that will, in all likelihood, always be independent and individually owned except insofar as they may join forces locally.

So there's the situation. It's a piece of business enterprise. If it isn't wrong legally—and manufacturers' chain stores are common in all fields—then it's waste of breath to argue about it. It's decidedly sensible to go to work.



Several years ago the producer dominated the picture market; then it was the distributor; today it is the theatre. And, curiously enough, with this new era—of the theatre—it looks like the producer is to come back to his own. He will be able to sell to large masses of theatres—and without that exorbitant distribution cost that has been the severest blow to production enterprise. Which may mean that we will have a large number of production units, independently active instead of being grouped, as they are today, under a few production banners.

Which, if it results in better pictures, will be the salvation of the whole business of motion picture entertainment. And this is the one and great point at issue—for each one of us.

So far as theatres are concerned—motion picture theatres—we don't believe they are going to stay put. There will be new kinds of them, designed to catch the public eye, right along; and the better kind will put the old style in the shadow. So we can't believe that control at any one period means continuing control—unless the controlling forces are continuously wide-awake and powerful. Plenty of new theatres are building right now. The theatre maps will change greatly in the next two years.

But at any rate product is the supreme thing. Product makes the show and the show draws the money. It matters not—so much, at least—who owns the theatre—or all the theatres—if the pictures don't meet the public taste.

Who are the producers of the future to be? That's the big question.

Milwaukee in British Eyes

THE KINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY, London, which printed an extensive cable story on the Milwaukee Convention from its American correspondent, has some interesting comment in a recent issue on the meaning of the meeting.

After pointing out that the convention is likely to "provide some valuable hints" for the C. E. A.—the British exhibitors' association—when that body's delegation returns to England, Kine says:

"The other results of the convention have still to be demonstrated in practice, but they are also noteworthy, so far as they go, as evidences of a tendency on the part of the American exhibitor to make independence something more than a catchword. The test will come when convention theory is to be translated into trade policies and the important thing at the moment is that the American exhibitor seems to have chosen very sound theories.

"The definite establishment of common interests between the independent exhibitor and the independent distributor has the further advantage that it tends to increase the amount of independent production and to raise its standard, and for this reason also the institution of the Play Date Bureau is momentous."

Kine also declares that, when the British visitors return home, "their message to the British trade, founded on what they have heard and observed at Milwaukee, will be of real value in a definitely critical stage of the industry's development."

Newman Sees Radio Value

THE following front page article from the Kansas City Star shows, in the opinion of Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman and Royal theatres, Kansas City, the value of radio tie-ups with newspapers which have broadcasting stations:

"Waring's Pennsylvanias, the Victor record artists appearing this week at the Newman theatre, will be the feature attraction of the Newman Nighthawk program, broadcast by WDAF, the Kansas City Star, from the stage of the theatre tonight. The band will play a jazz program, interspersed with classical and semi-classical numbers. Other performers from various other theatres will assist in the program, which will start at 11:45 o'clock."

Better Projection

IN connection with the "Greater Movie Season," a word ought to be said about better projection. Of course, that division of the operation of a theatre is always deserving of care and attention, because all the efforts that go into the making, exploitation and exhibition of pictures are thwarted if the projection booth does not do its duty properly.

First-class projection is all the more important when the industry is engaged in a drive to cement new good-will with the public via better pictures, exploited on a nation-wide scale. We suggest to exhibitors that the putting of their projection equipment in first-class condition is a duty they owe the industry as well as themselves. In fact, it will constitute a valuable contribution to the success of the "Greater Movie Season."

Film in Churches

AN interesting development was announced by Will H. Hayes in his speech before the International Rotary Convention at Cleveland last week. It has to do with motion pictures in the churches. Mr. Hays says:

"Cooperating with a great foundation we are experimenting with motion pictures of a strictly religious nature for use in the churches. This is not ready for announcement, but our representatives have surveyed the entire field of films having to do with these subjects and from several hundred have selected a small group which are being shown in twelve churches in twelve different towns within a radius of 150 miles of New York over a period of twelve consecutive Sundays. The purpose is to learn by this experiment how the programs affect the congregation, whether attendance is increased, how useful a picture may be in religious service. If the results are as anticipated we will organize adequately the demand and the supply."

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

One method of boosting the Greater Movie Season Drive. George K. Arthur authographs frying-pan he used in "The Exquisite Sinner" (Metro-Goldwyn).

Lolita Lee, the first applicant in Hollywood to the Paramount school for the development of screen aspirants. We bet she'll pass her exams.

SMOOTH ENOUGH

F. B. O. has used no trumpets in presenting "Smooth as Satin" but they could well afford to have gone to such lengths in acquainting the public with the entertainment values of this crook melodrama. It is a corking good number, smooth of plot, smooth of characterization, smooth in its direction and acting. It is a crook story not cut according to the popular style. For one thing romance isn't used to bring redemption. These crooks are much more convincing. They reform when realizing the depths in which one of their ilk has descended. A ragged sneak thief, despondent and broken in health and spirit, shows them the way.

There is a lot of good sound incident here—and much surprise and suspense. The wise thieves play a game of 'cat and mouse' with much wiser thieves. This is one episode which is "different." The players act with conviction—everything they do—every gesture they make, being in perfect key with the plot and characterization. There is a great thrill in the climax—one realistic and exciting to the core.

It's just the kind of picture that appeals to the pulse. No mystery element to bother you. Every bit of action is clearly defined and the ingredients comprise surprise, suspense, humor, heart interest—and thrills. It's a story that never gets out of key. There may be coincidence and dramatic license, but you'll never notice them in the rapid and sustaining plot that is unfolded here. "Smooth as Satin" is the best crook melodrama we've seen this season.

BACK TO THE CAMPUS

ITHACA, the seat of Cornell University, has not figured as a production center since the Whartons made their departure. But the college town is coming back into the picture. George Walsh is going to make a college story and his locations will be shot on and adjacent to the Cornell campus. The grads of a few years back will remember George. As a member of Fordham's football team he distinguished himself by beating Cornell single-handed (or single-footed) with a seventy yard drop kick.

In order to obtain the proper atmosphere for "The Big Parade" Laurence Stallings' original story for Metro-Goldwyn, a complete French village was built at Culver City, part of which is shown here.

Again "Ben Hur" (Metro-Goldwyn) gets into print; this time to publicize the fact that Frank Currier plays the role of "Arrius" in this long-awaited production.

Having survived twenty-nine "Reel" marriages Jacqueline Logan has made the thirtieth a real one with Ralph J. Gillespie as bridegroom. "Jacky" is working in "Thank You" (Fox) at present.

Alice is now in Warnerland, the Warner Brothers having taken over Miss Calhoun's contract from Vitagraph. Another good bet for the Warners.

Phil Rosen directing a scene in the humble home life of Victoria and Tony Bicket (Flora Le Breton and Charles Emmett Mack) which is a part of "The White Monkey" (First National), starring Barbara La Marr.

BUS FOR CONEY

IT'S worth taking the big bus ride to Coney these summer nights. The cooling breezes from the ocean blow right up to Marcus Loew's new Coney Island theatre which opened a week ago Wednesday The opening marked the fiftieth addition to the Loew chain of theatres in Greater New York. Nearly two hundred guests, representing practically every phase of the amusement world and including representatives from the dailies and trade and fan magazines assisted Mr. Loew on this gala occasion.

The reserves were called to get the "tourists" started on their way. The scene in front of the State Theatre resembled a motor hike or a parade. The cars carried the guests to the Shelburne for dinner. After the theatre ceremonies the crowd returned to the hotel for a supper dance. During the impromptu entertainment in the house practically every night club of importance in the greater city was represented. In addition to the cabaret entertainers—the usual galaxies of girls—several people in the public eye were introduced, including Johnnie Hines, Donald Kerr, Harry Hershfield, Bery Levy, Helene Davis and Dagmar Godowsky.

The new theatre is beautifully designed and has every modern convenience. It will be devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures. The pleasure-seeker who takes a trip to Coney can now kill two birds with one stone. He can enjoy a shore dinner and be entertained in the new Loew theatre.

Charlotte Merriam, working in "Steele of the Royal Mounted" (Vitagraph) under the direction of Dave Smith, is visited by Julian Eltinge, the female impersonator. They first met on a train, and when he arrived at the studio she was working on a Pullman set.

LOOKING THE PART

IN order to create the proper impressions of naturalness and realism several directors have gone in for weird attires. Thus when John Ford picked up the megaphone for "The Iron Horse," no one could have distinguished him from one of the section hands among the extras. He wore an old stocking cap, an overseas trench coat, heavy goloshes and mittens. This was necessary because he and his cameraman were compelled to find parking space in a dirt trench or on the cowcatcher of a locomotive.

Rowland V. Lee is another who gets into atmosphere with his clothes. In directing "Havoc" he was called upon to execute several trench scenes. So he chose an impartial sartorial make-up—which was as weird as it was practical. He wore an English steel helmet, German field boots, American goloshes, a sweater from Scotland and French leather gloves.

A NEW ARRIVAL

THE News gives its felicitations to Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Grahl of Des Moines, over the birth of a son, Charles Phillips Grahl, on June 10th at the General Hospital in the Iowa city. Mrs. Grahl is the Des Moines correspondent for the News.

Three familiar Broadway figures meet at the Culver City studios of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—Lucille La Verne, who created the leading role in "Sun Up" on the stage: Max Marcin, the playwright: and Edmund Goulding, now directing "Sun Up" (Metro Goldwyn).

BUSINESS OF DIETING

THE ladies usually monopolize feature space when it comes to methods of regulating the diet—whether the work is reducing or gaining weight. But here is Larry Kent, just signed to a five-year contract by F. B. O. for the impressions he made in recent pictures, who has a different system entirely. He wants to increase his weight. Because he has evolved a good scheme we intend to give him feature space here. He will regulate his habits of thought, and not his meals. His will be a mental diet. A list of annoyances which cause worry and which find no abiding place in the grey matter of the actor from now on are:

Cross word puzzles
Politicians
Press Agents
Keeping his eye on the ball
Tripe
and Swearing off smoking.

BLARNEY FROM BLARNEY STONE

COLLEEN MOORE has achieved one of her most cherished ambitions—she has kissed the Blarney Stone. During the three days spent in Ireland recently the star visited the Lakes of Killarney and Killarney Castle, kissed the celebrated stone, then went on to Dublin, where her appearance created quite a sensation. The sons and daughters of the Emerald Isle registered good, old-fashioned Irish sentiment in welcoming Colleen. Her husband, John McCormick wasn't neglected either.

THE SUMMER PICKINGS

IT is generally understood throughout the trade that producers are "scarey" of releasing their top-notchers during the summer—that the best ones are held back until Fall. While this is true to some extent producers have become more generous of late in releasing a first class allotment of better pictures. Perhaps the cooling systems being installed in the theatres have eliminated the bugaboo about slack summer business.

At any rate there have been several highly entertaining attractions brought forth this month. And July and August have yet to be paged. Several which have been shown are good enough for the banner month of the year. What about "Don Q," "Are Parents People," "Smooth as Satin," "I'll Show You the Town," "Siege," "Old Home Week," "The Manicure Girl," "The Desert Flower," "Paths to Paradise," "The Light of Western Stars," and "Beggar on Horseback"?

The National Board of Review has given its asterisks to several of them the last three weeks of June. The week ending the sixth of June favored "The Desert Flower" and "How Baxter Butted In," the week ending June 13 found "Kentucky Pride," a Fox entry, the sole choice, while the week ending June 20 favored "Night Life in New York," a Paramount picture, and another Fox, "The Fighting Heart."

These are all summer releases. Others are on the way. We hear great things about Metro-Goldwyn's "The Unholy Three," and the Arctic picture, "Kivalina of the Iceland," which comes to the Mark Strand next week. The latter is said to be another "Nanook." It features Eskimos, reindeer, caribou, whale and seal hunts—as well as shots of the Aurora Borealis in natural color and the freezing of the Arctic.

After this array we see no reason for crying "Wolf!" A good picture can draw the crowds in any season—but even if the crowds don't flock by the doorman they cannot be used for argumentative purposes in taking away from the film's merits.

The company on location filming "Perils of the Wild" (Universal) at Laguna. Francis Ford, the director may be seen assisting Margaret Quimby, the leading woman, across the rocks.

WITH POST-SHRINER TIDINGS

WITH the Shriners Convention in Los Angeles now a matter of historical record and pleasant memory certain features regarding screen people have come to light. Louis B. Mayer, production manager for M-G-M, was given a handsome gold cup for having entered the most magnificent display in the spectacular parade staged by the Shriners. Two electrically lighted floats and three "Ben Hur" chariots were entered and proved such an outstanding feature that the display was awarded first prize.

Over on the Warner lots Irene Rich is registering gladness. She was acclaimed the official queen of the Shriners during the convention and for an entire week was a very busy sovereign, being dined and feted continually. In the grand parade the queen in a gayly-bedecked chariot, received a continuous ovation throughout the line of march.

WHEN SCOOPING SPACE

WHEN it comes to scooping newspaper space First National need not take a back seat for anyone. They put over the Philadelphia zoo story in which "The Lost World" was shown to the lions to discover the reactions of the jungle king to the prehistoric animals—a story that provided good "copy" for dozens of newspapers. They are at it again this week. The New York dailies carried columns of matter on the explosion of the U. S. Shipping Board vessel, Corvallis, rechristened the Mandalay for the movies. It was exploded the other day 150 miles off Sandy Hook to afford picturegoers a thrill in the new production, "The Half-Way Girl."

The Corvallis was built at a cost of $900,000, though sold to F. N. at a much smaller figure. According to Earl Hudson, the big mogul of production, the vessel and the incidental expenses mounted to $125,000. His motto was—"Darn the expense, go ahead!" So five tons of dynamite were placed in the bow and five tons in the hold of the ship, as well as 1,000 pounds of blasting powder in the superstructure. The Mandalay went the way of all things which are heavily dynamited.

The papers played up the revenue cutter, Seneca, firing a shot across the bows of the F. N. tug for leaving the scene of disaster before all the wreckage had been blown to pieces. The skipper of the tug was forced to stand by for twenty-four hours until the Atlantic was free of the debris.

Jack Hoxie and his leading lady, Lola Todd, drop in at the soda fountain during the filming of his latest picture, "The Fighting Peacemaker" (Universal).

William Camron Menzies, who has been engaged as art director for "The Untamed" (United Artists), Valentino's first production for that company.

A MILLIONAIRE EXTRA

OCCASIONALLY a son of wealth tired of registering Big Business as it concerns stocks and bonds, or becoming bored with living a life of ease, takes to the movies. A scion of wealth from Philadelphia graced a few pictures a season or two ago—and others have followed him to the studios.

However, Lloyd Pantages, has something in common with amusements—being the son of Alexander Pantages, the owner of the famous Pantages vaudeville circuit. He is seeking fame on the screen, and will make his appearance in support of Rod La Rocque in the star's new picture which is being filmed at the Cecil DeMille studios.

His qualifications? The casting man says he is dark, possesses dramatic ability and is an excellent dancer, having won cups on several occasions at the Cocoanut Grove at the Ambassador Hotel.

POLA CHECKED OUT

POLA NEGRI has checked out, bag and baggage, for Hollywood after spending several weeks in New York, following her arrival from Europe. She has returned to the studios to begin work on the Hergesheimer story—which deals with Mexico and Mexicans. The star with her brunette coloring should be well cast as a senorita of the land south of the Rio Grande. When she is finished with this script she will start screening the Michael Arlen story, "Crossroads of the World."

We hope these stories are vital and moving enough to be compatible with her charm and ability. Certainly the authors know their technique.

All dolled up. Norma Shearer wearing the last word in sport outfits termed "Shearer Wear". This lovely lady plays opposite Lon Chaney in "The Tower of Lies" (Metro-Goldwyn).

Victor McLaglen in character he plays in "Winds of Chance" (First National). "Vic" has just signed a five year contract with First National which probably accounts for the grin.

CONTAGIOUS ROMANCE

THE above caption does not adorn a new photoplay. It is just to explain the fact that Cupid went on a rampage when "The Verdict" was being filmed. All sorts of romantic happenings developed that were not written in the script. First the director, Fred Windemere announced that he had married Belle Bennett, a film star. Then the news leaked out that Lou Telegen, one of the stars of the production admitted that he was married and the proud father of an infant son. Soon after this came the tidings that Paul Weigel, another featured player had married Mrs. Florence Stevens Harvey, a prominent Pasadena society woman.

REGISTERING JAZZ

THE New York Rivoli is going in for jazz. Hugo Riesenfeld, the impressario of the theatre, will call the conductors off their pedestals on July 12th—and order the orchestra to vacate their chairs. Ben Bernie and his band are to supplant them and establish jazz numbers. The orchestra ensemble will consist of twelve jazz musicians. However, the picture policy will not be changed.

Virginia Vance in a scene from an Educational comedy. At first glance one would think it a pantominic version of the popular ballad "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles."

"Wear the photo of your favorite filmstar in your hat" the latest fan stunt in Hollywood. Pauline Starke, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Player helped introduce this stunt.

An intricate move in the Butts army manual, which Director Sedgwick is using to train Norman Kerry for "The Pony Express" (Universal).

Seider Advocates Reforms In Arbitration System

M. P. T. O. A. Official Gives Views on Subject

SWEEPING reforms in the present Arbitration system are advocated by Joseph M. Seider, President of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey and Chairman of the Standard Contract and Arbitration Committee of the M. P. T. O. A.

In an article written exclusively for Motion Picture News, Mr. Seider declares that the present system is litigation and not arbitration. He urges that distributor and exhibitor each be permitted to choose two persons to mediate differences that arise, with an umpire to be chosen if the four cannot agree.

He declares that "the present system must be thrown out in its entirety and a new system created." One of the points he stresses is that the exhibitor should in fact be allowed to name his arbitrators.

Mr. Seider's article, which reviews the history of Arbitration briefly as a preliminary to a discussion of the reforms he advocates, is of importance and interest to the whole industry. It follows:

"When first Arbitration was introduced into this Industry, it had no Exhibitor participation. The F.I.L.M. Club would meet, appoint a committee from among themselves, and this committee would summon the Theatre Owner. For failure to appear, the Exhibitor would be Hoyed, that, is, he would receive no film from any F.I.L.M. Club members. If he did appear the committee would hear both sides and would render judgement and enforce the judgment through Hoy. The ony recourse the Theatre Owner had was an appeal to the main body of the F.I.L.M. Club.

"Then Mr. Hays came into this Industry. He quickly realized the dangers of such a procedure and forthwith set out to correct the same, but he did not go far enough.

"The Hoy System was dropped. I have no quarrel with Mr. Hoy personally—in fact, I think very highly of him. However, the System that bore his name, it seems to me was vicious. In fact, both Distributors and Exhibitors still call being put on a cash deposit as being Hoyed.

Fight For Participation Won

"William Brandt, then President of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, successfully fought for Exhibitor participation on the Arbitration Boards and Bernard Edelhertz, then Chairman of the Board of Directors of that body, successfully championed the elimination of the use of different contracts by each Distributor and the substitution of a contract, substantially the same as to form.

"That this contract is inequitable and too long is obvious.

"I went into this matter at length in my report at the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America Convention at Milwaukee and will now confine myself to the subject of Arbitration.

"Much as I regret it I am compelled to say that predicated on the present contract, Arbitration in no form can be just or stand.

And forgetting this one-sided contract, let us see how Arbitration works out.

"First, the Distributor appoints three members on the Arbitration Board, and the Exhibitor's organization in the zone out of which the film is shipped appoints three Exhibitors. If there is no Exhibitor's organization, then the President of the local Chamber of Commerce appoints the Exhibitor's members, and if there is no Chamber of Commerce, then the Mayor of the town or city in which the film exchanges are located makes the appointment.

"When a Board so constituted renders a verdict, it is final and not appealable.

"And if the Board finds for the Exhibitor and the Distributor fails to carry out the award, he loses his right to bring cases before the Arbitration Board. While if the Theatre Owner loses and does not comply with the award, he is practically forced into making payment; otherwise, he gets no film unless he deposits from one hundred to five hundred dollars with each of about twenty-one exchanges.

"Why should the Arbitration Board be both the Judge and the Sheriff? In most States a judgment rendered by an Arbitration Board can be filed with the clerk of a Court of Record and made a judgment of that Court and collectible through the Sheriff or other civil officer.

Joseph M. Seider, president of M. P. T. O. of New Jersey and chairman of the M. P. T. O. A. contract and arbitration committee.

"In what way does the Exhibitor benefit if the Distributor loses his right to bring cases before the Arbitration Board for failure to abide by the award of the Board in an Arbitration proceeding? On the contrary, the Distributor may be the gainer and the Exhibitor the loser; such as, in a case where an Exhibitor has a case against a Distributor, this Distributor instead of being punished, is helped because the case cannot be brought against him, as the rule works both ways.

Cites Typical Case

"A case in point is that of the Producers Distributing Corporation when Arbitration under their contracts was refused by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. Theatre Owners within the T.O.C.C. and outside the T.O.C.C., who had claims against the Producers Distributing Corporation, had to resort to Court or await the adjustment of their claims until after the Producers Distributing Corporation was again in good standing.

Often a Theatre Owner has been summoned to defend a case without merit. He is compelled to expend a large sum of money for railroad fare alone, and yet, even though he successfully defends his case, the cost is not returned to him. How many cases without merit were settled by the Theatre Owner in order to save himself the huge expense involved in defending same?

"Yet, much is made of the fact that the Distributor loses his right to bring cases before the Arbitration Board. Let us check up a bit. What does this mean? Why is the denying of the right of Arbitration to the Distributor considered by the Film Boards of Trade a punishment? Their very argument, that the Distributor must honor the award of the Board because he cannot afford to lose his right to Arbitration, is conclusive proof that the Arbitration Board and the System is a collection agency for the Distributor.

Jurisdiction Questioned

"Arbitration—I have seen Saul Rogers refuse to arbitrate on the ground that the Board had no jurisdiction. The Board pow-wowed and decided it had no jurisdiction. The Exhibitors representing the Theatre Owner agreed that they had no jurisdiction. The Exhibitor was ready to proceed, he signed the submission (a paper waiving rights to trial by jury, making decision of Board final, etc.); thereby, the Exhibitor members of the Board had jurisdiction. Through Mr. Rogers objecting for the Fox Exchange, the Distributors alone had no jurisdiction. But let this be —What do you think happened then? After the Board decided that it had no jurisdiction. Attorney Rogers requested the Chairman (an Exhibitor appointed to represent the Exhibitor litigant) to make the decision read 'Dismissed, because there is no contract,' and the Chairman, an Exhibitor, said 'Yes.'

"How did the Board know there was no contract? They didn't hear the case, and if they had no jurisdiction, how could they come to a conclusion and dismiss the case on the merits?

"Did you ever see Arbitration Boards in action?

"Two Parts—Part One and Part Two—Calendars, Inquests, Default Judgments, Trials, Court Crier and everything.

"The Arbitration Boards mimic a Court of Law. One Board wanted its members to wear black gowns, so that the Exhibitor should have the more respect for the Board.

"I am sure that Mr. Hays, Mr. Hess and Mr. Pettijohn do not know these conditions.

"From cold figures, submitted by biased employees, these gentlemen are led to believe that the Theatre Owner generally is pleased with the present methods.

Criticizes Board Structure

"The very manner in which the Board is made up makes fairness improbable. By this statement, please, do not infer that the Arbitrators themselves are not honest. Such is not the case. The New York Territory has the good fortune of having a man of the highest type and character for its Chairman of the T.O.C.C. Arbitration committee. I refer to Sol Raives. Then there are Leon Rosenblatt, M. S. McNamara, Rudolph Sanders, Adolp Barr, and many others, but they are tied up by rules and opposed by three members closely knit, representing the Distributor, who, we are told, discuss each case at their weekly Film Board of Trade meetings.

"Arbitrate—Mr. Webster says it means to act as arbiter; to settle a dispute, as an umpire; mediate. And Arbitrator—Mr. Webster says—means one chosen by the parties in dispute to settle it; an umpire.

"Therefore, how can the present method which amounts to litigation be called arbitration?

"Yes, I can agree with you to arbitrate our differences by leaving it to a number of people satisfactory to both of us. In such a case the decision of the arbitrators would and should be final and binding.

"But why should I be forced to arbitrate—no, why should I be forced to try a case before a Board appointed by an organization of which I am not a member? Why should the President of the Chamber of Commerce or the Mayor appoint my judges?

"I don't want even the organization of which I am a member to appoint my judges unless I specifically consent to it.

Exhibitor Side of System

"If an organization can obtain new members and hold its old ones only through control or domination of the Exhibitor's side of the Arbitration System, then the organization should not obtain new members or hold its old ones. Its method is a menace to every Independent Theatre Owner.

"An organization can get new members and hold its old ones by providing counsel to present in a logical, orderly way its members' contentions, by supervising the Arbitration System, by tabulating disputed issues and advising its members in relation thereto.

"That splendid organization in the City of New York, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, of which I am a member in good standing, has done much for the improvement of Arbitration procedure.

"It has definitely established that a Theatre Owner may withdraw his application for a contract at any time before its acceptance by the Distributor. In the event of a dispute, the postmark would show whether the acceptance was mailed first or the withdrawal was mailed first. The time of mailing and not the time of receipt decides such a dispute. I believe this point should be stressed. I want every Theatre Owner, whether he be in Maryland, Oklahoma, Washington or New York; in fact, every Theatre Owner in the United States, to know this important ruling.

Praises O'Rielly Move

"Charles L. O'Reilly has obtained a 50% control of the Arbitration Board, that is, one month the trials are held in the Film Board of Trade's Headquarters and one month in the T.O.C.C., when hearings are held in the Exhibitor's headquarters a Distributor is the Chairman and vice versa. The Secretary of the T.O.C.C. is a Clerk of the Court, with the Secretary of the Film Board of Trade. The same goes for the stenographer Yet, Mr. O'Reilly, although he has gained much for New York, is not finding a solution for the Theatre Owners of New York or the balance of the country—has not gotten down to the root of the evil.

"Nathan Burkan, counsel for the T.O.C.C., has said that the contract is unfair and too long and I understood that he has also said that if New York Arbitration is a model, then he is sorry for the balance of the country.

"Mr. O'Reilly's good work is being wasted. You cannot correct conditions by trying to improve on the present system. It must be thrown out in its entirety and a new system created. You cannot use the present contract or Arbitration method as a model.

Right of Trial Sacrificed

"In arbitrating I am giving up orderly procedure in a Court of Law—my right to trial by jury—the reviewing of the facts of my case by a trained and learned judge and, therefore, want in fact to appoint the Arbitrators to represent my side. Film Men, let this sink in—REPRESENT MY SIDE. Members of Arbitration Boards are prone to be biased—you know you are biased and you tell the Exhibitor members not to be biased. You should be biased. The idea is—the exchange and the Exhibitor could not agree. The exchange picks three men and the Exhibitor picks three men to agree for them.

"I don't want the right to challenge the Distributor's choice. He should not have the right to challenge mine; but I want the right to choose my men.

"Let us each choose two persons to mediate and settle our disputes, and if they cannot agree, let them choose an umpire whose decision would be binding. Do not confiscate my property. Give me a short, clear, equitable contract.

"Then I will be happy to arbitrate; have confidence in the Arbitration Board, and be satisfied with its decision.

"THAT would be Arbitration."

Report Britain May Tax Non-English Film

ACCORDING to an article in "Film Renter," a London motion picture trade publication, the Government will receive a proposal that a tax of sixpence per reel per day upwards, according to the class of theatre, be levied on all non-British films shown in England. The article states that the proposal is backed by a powerful and influential commercial group interested in raising funds for British film production.

The article continues: "This suggestion it is understood, is likely to receive serious consideration. Such a form of tariff, it is apparent, will fall extremely unfairly upon the exhibitor, besides in no way solving the question of restarting our studios."

New British Corporation Acquires Houses

The recently organized United International Corporation, Ltd., of London, controlled by the Instone Brothers interests, has already purchased a string of theatres throughout the British Empire and negotiations are under way for a number of additional houses.

Among other activities of this hustling new organization, they have signed a contract for the output of a cartoon series and will shortly ship some high class English and Continental films to America. They announce themselves as in the market to purchase any important American films for England and the Continent.

The Instones have appointed William Rosenblatt as their American representative. His offices are at 165 Broadway, New York City.

U. S. Pictures Popular in Egypt and Denmark

Both Egypt and Denmark are proving excellent markets for American films, according to reports recently received by the Department of Commerce from its foreign agents. The former has more than 40 theaters and a large number of outdoor theaters, and American pictures probably represent 55 per cent of the total shown.

American pictures have captured over 70 per cent of the Danish market. There are about 350 motion picture theaters in Denmark, about 38 of which, with a seating capacity of about 20,000, are located in Copenhagen. Proof of the dominance of the American film in this market is given by the reports of the Danish censor. From April 1, 1924, to January 31, 1925, 466 of the pictures passed were of American origin, 131 Danish, 27 Swedish, 20 German, 15 French, 7 English and 2 Russian.

280 All-Year Film Houses in Albany Zone

According to figures that have just been compiled by the M. P. T. O. Albany Zone secretary, there are 280 motion picture theatres in the Albany Zone which are open the entire year. There are 75 that operate summers only and 20 that operate only during the winter months. There are now 107 in the Zone that are paid members of the organization.

Twenty-Four Cities Organized For Greater Movie Season

Movement for Big August Drive Sweeps Entire Country

FROM eleven cities announced last week as organized to participate in Greater Movie Season, which movement was launched by the Will Hays organization, the number of cities now in line for the great National event which is scheduled for August has increased to twenty-four. The eleven last week included New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Kansas City, Atlanta, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Denver, Salt Lake City and New Haven. To these are now added Los Angeles, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Atlantic City, St. Louis, Albany, Butte, Memphis, Cleveland, Cincinnatti, San Francisco, Washington, D. C., Buffalo, and Montgomery, Alabama.

Exhibitors' committees, embracing not only circuits, but single house operators, have been formed to develop campaigns in conformity with the general scheme, yet with such variations as are necessary to meet local requirements and to benefit the outer fields as well as the key centers.

That Greater Movie Season in Los Angeles this year will parallel last year's success is certain through the whole-hearted cooperation of theatres, studios and every phase of the industry. It is realized that Los Angeles must set the national standard. Jack Retlaw, special representatives of West Coast Theatres, Inc., will be general manager of the campaign, working in conjunction with the Wampas Committee. A huge parade of stars has been arranged. Complete support of commercial interests is assured by the Chamber of Commerce.

It is expected that Greater Movie Season will open in Los Angeles during the last week of July in order that publicity accruing from the stars' participation may be carried throughout the country in time to influence the coast-to-coast celebration.

Des Moines Drive Under Way

At a meeting of the moving picture interests in Des Moines, A. G. Stolte, Manager of the A. H. Blank enterprises who had been elected general manager of the Greater Movie Season campaign at a previous meeting appointed the following committees to assist him in the campaign. Board of Managers — Harry Hiersteiner, Herbert Grove, Harry Mitchnik, exhibitors, and W. Banford of the Metro Goldwyn exchange.

Finance Committee—Harry Hiersteiner, Jess Day, exhibitors and Frank Crawford of Famous Players. Press Committee—D. Day of the A. H. Blank Offices, chairman with power to select assistants—Cooperative Committee to obtain window displays, tie-ups, etc., Tilton of First National Exchange, chairman with the assistance of the publicity men of all local exchanges. Bill Posting Committee—Herbert Grove, Mr. B. I. Van Dyke and Mr. S. Elman, exhibitors. Parade Committee—Banford of Metro-Goldwyn, E. I. Tilton of First National, and M. Gottlieb of Universal. Decoration Committee—Abe Frankel, H. Mitchnik and H. Grove, exhibitors. Newspaper Advertising —A. G. Stolte, O. Kenyon, exhibitors, and Ballantyne of Pathe.

It was decided to start the advertising campaign actively on July 19th, opening Greater Movie Season on Monday, August 3rd, with a big street parade on Saturday, August 1st.

Because Minneapolis inaugurated the First cooperative drive, Northwest Go-to-Movie-Week in 1922, from which the national season developed and exhibitors have learned its box-office value, an extensive campaign is looked for throughout this territory embracing all the Finklestein and Rueben houses and the membership of the Allied States organization, of which W. A. Steffes is chairman. Exhibitors' meetings are now being set for a discussion of ways and means and the election of a general manager.

Atlantic City Meeting

Atlantic City joined the Greater Movie Season Campaign on Wednesday when every theatre in the city and a great many outlying cities, sent representatives to a meeting held at the Globe Theatre. Edward J. O'Keefe, Manager of the City Square theatre, was elected General Manager of the Atlantic City campaign; Alexander Strauss, Manager of the Colonial, vice chairman William Ford, manager Central Theatre, chairman of decoration committee; John Gillespie, chairman, publicity committee.

What is estimated to be a gift of more than $100,000 in bill-board space was presented to the Greater Movie Season Campaign at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Poster Advertising Association at the Hotel Traymore.

This association, headed by W. W. Workman of Richmond, Va., which represents 1,600 billboard plants throughout the United States, investigated thoroughly the plans of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., for Greater Movie Season and adopted a resolution calling upon all its members to contribute billboard space to the various Greater Movie Season Committees throughout the country.

St. Louis Committees Named

Joe Mogler, President of the local Motion Picture Theatre Owners, was elected General Manager of the St. Louis Greater Movie Season Campaign at an enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors. Fred Brinkmeyer, general manager of the Skouras Circuit, will be assistant General Manager. The Finance Committee is as follows: George McKean, Chairman; Oscar Lehr, assistant manager; Eugene Freund, Henry Shearer, Harry Keplar, Hershel Stuart, Harry Greeman, Tom Meyers, Charles Skouras, Fred Wohrenberg, William Goldman, Fred Cornwall, Mike Nast, John Karzin.

Spyres Skouras is chairman of the newspaper committee with the following associates, J. Hill, assistant chairman; William Goldman, Wm. Saal and H. Stromberg.

Publicity Committee; Reeves Espy, chairman; D. Dygart assistant chairman; George Gabriel, Maurice Davis, Al Marks, Morris Stahl, M. Reeves, Charles Goldman, Claude McKean, Harry Neimeyer, Jack Schultz, Chas. W. and Arthur Wade.

Parade Committee; Fred Wohenberg, chairman; Sam Koplar, Assistant Chairman, Harry Weiss, Herbert Kraus, Thomas McKean, I. Koenig, Bessie Schulter; Dave Nelson, Wm. Shearer, Benj. Harris, Jos. Wagner, J. D. Hill, Harry Hynes.

Ten thousand dollars was voted for carrying on the campaign.

Albany Zone Active

Tony Veiller, of the Mark Strand-Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y., was appointed general manager of the Greater Movie Season at a meeting of exhibitors from the Albany zone. Mr. Veiller, an ex-newspaper man, is considered the ideal choice. His election means that the campaign will go over one hundred percent. Meyer Schine, of the Schine circuit, and Mr. Smalley of the Smalley circuit were prominent at the meeting.

After a thorough discussion of the Greater Movie Season plan the principal exhibitors of Butte and Anaconda appointed the following committee to handle the drive; William J. Sullivan, Rialto Theatre, chairman and general manager; Merle Davis, Ansonia Theatre; William Woolfall, Peoples Theatre; George Buckmiller, Ansonia Theatre; Albert Nadeau, Blue Bird Theatre, Anaconda, R. C. Hudson, Universal; Frank Murphy, Famous Players, and W. J. Heineman, Warner Brothers. Theatres represented on the general committee have pledged themselves to participate, and at a further meeting an advertising appropriation will be determined to put the season over in vigorous style.

Strong Backing in Memphis

A strong organization has been formed to handle Greater Movie Season in Memphis with Lloyd Dearth, of the Pantages Theatre as chairman and William A. Finney, of Loew's State Theatre, secretary-treasurer. George Brown, of Loew's Palace, Walter League, of the Strand, and Bert Jordan of the Majestic, comprise the board of directors, while members of the general committee are Joe Maceri, Paul Zerilla, Tom Ballas, Clark Porter, Tony Richards and Fred Suzorre, all prominent exhibitors in this territory.

A special committee of exchange executives to work in conjunction with the exhibitors' organization consists of A. J. Carey, Pathe, chairman; W. E. Swipe, Universal, secretary-treasurer; C. E. Hilger, Famous Players, and J. L. Franconi, F. B. O., directors. Little Rock, Ark., being affiliated with Memphis, a solid campaign is also expected there.

Preliminary work for Greater Movie Season is being done in Cleveland with a view to submitting a concrete campaign to theatre-owners, who will attend a meeting together with exchange managers, exploitation and publicity men. To add weight and prestige to the movement several prominent business men will be made honorary members of the general committee. Contacts have been established with local branches of the national organizations that have endorsed Greater Movie Season in letters to Will H. Hays. A canvass of important exhibitors shows them to be unanimously in favor of the season.

Cincinnati will swing into line with other key-cities celebrating Greater Movie Season in August. Negotiations involving the Libson theatres and membership of the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors are going forward to bring about an effective campaign. No general manager has yet been named.

San Francisco Optimistic

With profitable experience of previous Greater Movie Seasons, San Francisco theatres anticipate further success this August when the season will have behind it the full weight of a national drive. Local and national efforts will form the subject of discussions when field-representatives of the Will H. Hays organization arrive this week. Meanwhile Herman Wobber, who was largely instrumental in putting over previous seasons, is marshaling exhibitors.

Harry M. Crandall has been elected general manager of Greater Movie Season in Washington, D. C. The committee on finances consisting of Mr. Crandall, Julian Brylawski of the Earle Theatre, Larry Beatus of the Palace Theatre, Wm. P. Herbst, Morris Davis of the "M" Street Theatre, and Nash Weil, is preparing a budget to be passed upon by the next meeting of exhibitors and exchange managers.

At a meeting of Buffalo exhibitors and exchange managers Thursday, June 18, in the Root building offices of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., committees were named to aid in putting over the Greater Movie Season in Buffalo and western New York. J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent, was named chairman of the exhibitor committee which includes Walter Hays, Barney Vohwinkle, Jacob Rappaport, William Dillemuth, N. Vassiliadis, M. Slotkin, Fred M. Shafer, Al Beckerich, Frank Nowak and Arthur Skinner. Members of the exchange managers' committee are: Sydney Samson, Norman L. Sper, Howard F. Brink, Marvin W. Kemper, Harry T. Dixon, Frank J. A. McCarthy, W. C. Rowell, Henry W. Kahn, Basil Brady, Fred M. Zimmerman, Joe Miller, W. L. Sherry, Earl W. Kramer and Charles W. Anthony.

$3,500 Budget Voted

A budget of $3,500 was voted for an extensive billboard and newspaper campaign to be started two weeks in advance. A second meeting was held Friday June 26 in the Hotel Statler when the various committees necessary to put the campaign over were appointed and several western New York cities organized for the movement. H. L. Royster, representing the Hays office in New York has been in town getting the campaign under way. Buffalo is behind the idea 100 per cent., according to Mr. Michael and an extensive publicity barrage will be laid down in this end of the state.

Radio Tells of Warners' Southern Invasion

WARNER BROTHERS are using the radio extensively to let motion picture fans know of their invasion of the southern exhibition field. The taking over of the houses in the south was broadcasted and in some instances the first day's operations under the new management were announced.

The southern theatres recently purchased by Warners include the Pastime, Concord, N. C., the Lexington at Lexington, N. C., the Broadway, Charlotte, N. C., and the Ideal, Columbia, S. C. The concern also obtained a management option on the Lincoln, a Craver theatre, at Winston-Salem, N. C.

H. C. Farley was named general manager of Greater Movie Season in Montgomery, Alabama.

At the request of the bureau in charge of Greater Movie Season, Nationaal Screen Service has undertaken the production of two unusual trailers for exhibitor use as their contribution to the drive. Entertainment value has been aimed for and attained to such a degree that the trailers can be regarded as featurettes, one of 200 ft., and the other of 100 ft.

Contrasting modern pictures with flashes from such early efforts as Vitagraph's "License No. 13 or the Hoodoo Auto," produced in 1905, and Universal's "Going Straight" of 1910, with Mary Pickford and King Baggott, the huge advance in screen-art is emphasized; shots of travel put over the idea that films bring the world to a patron's chair, while well-animated titles and cartoons stress the industry's financial importance.

The trailers are finely dressed with art titles, and a big demand has already come for them from key-cities where exhibitors have formed their Greater Movie Season organizations. National Screen Service conforms with other manufacturers in making their offerings available at cost, the 200 ft. trailer being $6.00 and the 100 ft. production, $3.50.

License Reduction Won for Kansas City

As a result of the combined effort of the Kansas-Missouri exhibitors the license tax has been reduced on theatres in Jackson County, in which Kansas City is located. The decrease was obtained through an appeal by the exhibitor body to the county court.

The old license scale called for an annual tax of $100 for all theatres of more than 600 seats and $50 for houses of less than 600 seats. The new order reads as follows:

"Upon each motion picture show in Jackson, County, Missouri, given or conducted in a building in an inclosure in said county, the license tax therefore is hereby fixed and imposed in the sum of $5 per year for each 100 seats or fraction thereof, provided that the minimum license tax for any motion picture theatre shall be $25 per year or pro rata for a shorter period thereof, and that the maximum license tax for any motion picture theatre shall be $50 per year or pro rata for a shorter period thereof."

Head of Canada Association Aids "Open Door" Program

Col. John A. Cooper of Toronto, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, representing the Hays organization in the Dominion, has just carried out an effective bit of co-operation with the New York Association of the industry in the distribution throughout the whole of Canada of the pamphlet called "The Open Door," which was prepared by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

This booklet deals with the organization of a Department of Public Relations in the New York office of the Will H. Hays body for the purpose of securing co-operation from the general public. In Canada a general invitation has been issued to editors, public men and others to offer criticisms or suggestions that would lead to the improvement of the screen.

Customer Given Preference Over Universal's Own House

Dunsmoor Case Cited As Explaining Policy of "U"

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, recently faced with the alternative of withholding Universal product from a regular Universal exhibitor or seeing a newly acquired Universal theatre in the same town go without the Universal product, has come out, it was announced this week, in favor of the exhibitor, C. C. Dunsmoor, proprietor of the Legion Theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa. The Legion Theatre will continue to show Universal Pictures, while the Casino of Marshalltown, recently bought by Mr. Laemmle from Hostettler, must buy outside product.

This is announced by Universal as Mr. Laemmle's answer to queries whether or not his theatre acquisitions would bring hardships to regular Universal customers. Wherever this question comes up, the Laemmle forces have been instructed that "the customer gets the preference," the announcement says.

There are three theatres in Marshalltown: the Casino, the Universal house; the Strand, owned by the Blank-Balaban & Katz interests and the Legion. It was reported this week that A. H. Blank might build a new house in the town.

The Casino Theatre was taken over by Universal as a part of the Hostettler chain. That chain, the storm center of the Omaha territory, was being angled for by several big producers, and Universal bought in "self-defense" in order to keep from being frozen out of that territory altogether, according to statements made at the time of the purchase.

Mr. Dunsmoor has been a Universal exhibitor for some time. When he realized that the Casino, his competing house, had become a Universal house, he sat down and wrote to Carl Laemmle, asking what effect the purchase would have on the Legion Theatre. The Universal chief answered as follows:

"To prove that neither you nor any other exhibitor need have any fear that the Universal has any desire or intention of harming you, I am prepared to offer you the Universal product for your house for the 1925-1926 season and I am prepared to say that I will continue to do this as long as you and the Universal remain in business if you are willing to meet me even a part of the way in the matter of price. The fact that Universal may or may not have an interest in an opposition theatre will make no difference. It will not deprive you of Universal pictures.

"I don't want to compete with you or with any other exhibitor who gives me a half-way decent 'break.' Universal has not deliberately invaded your town. The opposition theatre simply happened to be a part of a chain of theatres which I had to buy because Universal was frozen out of some of the towns represented by the chain of theatres. So, even if Universal should harm one of its own theatres, or a theatre in which it has an interest, by giving Universal pictures to you, I am ready to go through with it one hundred percent."

As a result of this communication, a Universal representative visited Dunsmoor and arranged a contract for the Second White List, Universal's 1925-1926 product. Mr. Dunsmoor now says that he did not believe the contract would be approved by the Universal Home Office. True, the prices were somewhat higher than he had paid in the past, but still he was sceptical and questioned whether he would get the Universal product or not.

Upon receiving the contract he wrote a letter to Mr. Laemmle, praising him for his fairness. He also told the story to the local newspaper which printed laudatory stories of the deal.

Here is the letter Dunsmoor wrote to Mr. Laemmle:

"Dear Sir:—The other day I received your approval on your second white list contract I signed. The very day after the news was made public of your buying the Casino your representative called on me. I asked him: 'Why call on me now that Universal has a house here.' He replied that it made no difference, and as long as I had been running the product he would again offer me the '25 and '26 stuff. I, a little skeptical, said 'Sure, offer at a prohibitive price.' But he soon made it plain that the price was quite fair so I signed up, with doubts of getting an approved contract.

"In due time the contract came back, and, Carl, I want to thank you for your fairness in the matter, and I think I can make money on the price paid. Believe me with the line up I have now your manager will have to go some when I play the Dennys and Hoots.

"It may be of interest to you to read the news item in the local paper, and believe me Carl there is more truth in this paragraph than the picture magnates will admit openly.

"Again thanking you for your fairness and hoping you will prosper as you deserve I am

"Sincerely yours,
"C. C. Dunsmoor,
"Marshalltown, Iowa.
"June 19, 1925.

"P. S. You will notice that I paid a very considerable increase over the rental of last year, but I did it for two reasons: I really am expecting a better year next year and I think that your new product with the national advertising it is getting is entitled to an increase, and with absolute confidence that if business fails to increase that you will protect me. I don't care what I pay for service if we both can make money."

Here is the newspaper clipping from the Marshalltown Labor World to which reference is made in Dunsmoor's letter:—

"The Universal Picture Corporation, who sometime ago bought the Casino Theatre, has lived up to Carl Laemmle's declaration that he does not want to be a competitor of the independent exhibitor who has run his product by selling his next year's output of pictures to Mr. Dunsmoor of the Legion theatre.

"The situation is all the more interesting as the Universal products for the coming year are of exceptional quality and Mr. C. C. Dunsmoor, manager of the Legion theatre is to be congratulated upon his shrewdness in contracting for them. Also Carl Laemmle is to be congratulated for his fairness in selling his product to the Legion theatre, even though he now will be compelled to run other pictures in his newly acquired house.

"The public may not be aware, but there is now a terrific battle going on in the picture industry, the larger firms trying to get control of the industry all through the country destroying competition and only too late will the masses realize that they will pay later to the trusts.

"For better pictures and fair prices the industry should keep competition alive, and if the small independent exhibitor plays square with the public the public will stand by them."

The following statement was given out at the Universal Home Office in connection with the Dunsmoor case:

"The same answer that Mr. Laemmle gave Dunsmoor, goes for all the other Marshalltowns in America. Universal is not in business in competition with its customers. It never was, it never will be. Mr. Laemmle will sell every theatre he has, as he said at Milwaukee, if he can get a square break in the bookings of those theatres and always assuming that the purchaser will take the lean with the fat. He does not propose to sell the good theatres and be saddled with the unprofitable ones.

"If the theatre business is going to resolve itself into a producer-controlled situation, Universal does not propose to be left out in the cold because it did not take heed of the way the wind was blowing. But if independent exhibitors are going to hang on to their theatres; if they are going to fight, Universal will fight with them as it always has done and will spend every last dollar it has to maintain their independence and its own."

SPURGEON JOINS FOX NEWS
In Charge of Editorial Council

JOHN J. SPURGEON, newspaper editor and writer of wide experience, has become Chairman of the Editorial Council of Fox News, Motion picture reel of current events issued by Fox Film Corporation.

Spurgeon's newspaper career began at the age of sixteen when he became a reporter on the Philadelphia Press, then edited by former Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith. Later he served on the Cleveland World, and returning to New York, became associated with the Mail and Express. Upon retiring from the city desk of that paper, he became telegraph editor of the New York Herald and he left there to join the Joseph Pulitzer staff on The World. He was in turn reporter, copy reader, night City Editor and acting Managing Editor of The World.

Spurgeon in 1915 returned to Philadelphia where for seven years he was Managing Editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and on the first day of January, 1923, became managing Editor of the Washington Post.

The alliance of Spurgeon with Fox News, which continues under Truman H. Talley, Director-in-chief, completes a staff of experienced journalists comprised of Spurgeon, Edwin C. Hill, Charles Sarver, John Weier, Gerald K. Rudulph, Ray Hall, Elizabeth Pickett, James Darst and William A. White.

To Urge Admission Tax Repeal

Removal Will Be Recommended at the Next Session of Congress in December

THE theatre admission tax will be among the levies which Secretary of the Treasury Mellon will urge for repeal before the Ways and Means Committee of the House when that body meets in October to work on the bill which it will introduce at the December session of Congress.

The proposal to repeal this and other taxes which carry the "war taint" is likely to meet with favorable action by the Committee and Congress as well, representatives of both parties having pledged themselves to remove the so-called "war measures" from the revenue bill.

Leaders in Congress are determined to pass a revenue law which will simplify matters for the taxpayer, and among the confusing sections which have been recommended for removal in the process of lightening the burdens of the income taxpayer is the admission tax. It is also among the group which has come into disfavor since it was introduced during the war period and is regarded an unpleasant reminder of war.

Much of the consideration given to the framing of a new bill will be directed toward relief for the individual taxpayer, a source from which bitter complaints over the confusing technicalities of the present measure have proceeded. It is believed in Washington that the removal of the admission and other small taxes will work for the benefit of the country generally, it being contended in some quarters that their repeal would be as welcome as a further lowering of the income tax.

Stars To Attend Jersey Meet

Record Attendance Expected at Convention to Be Held at Asbury Park Next Week

JOSEPH M. SEIDER, president of the State organization, and heads of committees in charge of the convention to be held at Asbury Park on June 29, 30 and July 1, declare that indications point to a record attendance of exhibitors at the sixth annual meeting of the New Jersey body.

Exhibitors from all parts of the state have signified their intention of attending the meeting, which the officers of the organizations have planned on a more elaborate scale than anything attempted previously by the Jersey Theatre Owners.

Among the leading features of the business program are President Seider's report, National President Woodhull's address, National Chairman of the Board of Directors Sydney S. Cohen's address, Milwaukee Convention, Bureau of Trade & Commerce, Play Dates, Greater Movie Season, Power Rate reduction, The Report on Arbitration by Leon Rosenblatt, and the elimination of duplication of dues are some of the important business features to be brought up at the business sessions of the convention.

To the entertainment schedule already announced there have been added several outstanding features. Among these will be the appearance of the forty-eight girls and Principals from Earl Carrol's "Vanities," and swimming and diving exhibitions by Olive Filer, Penthalon champion and junior national 100 yard free style champion, and Ruth Thomas, member of the American Olympic team.

Martin J. Starr, who has many motion picture stars under his personal supervision, will present some of the screen's biggest celebrities at Asbury Park convention. Tom Meighan, Johnnie Walker, Johnny Hines and Dagmar Godowsky have definitely promised to appear.

Among those who have accepted the invitation to be present are United States Senator Edward I. Edwards and Assemblywoman Mae Carty, sponsor of the New Jersey Sunday Opening Bill, and Nathan Burkan, counsel for T. O. C. C.

Plan Winter Campaign on Daylight Saving

With many of the leading cities of New York state at odds when it comes to the question of daylight saving or standard time, motion picture exhibitors are quietly planning a campaign during the coming winter that may bring a resultant saving of thousands of dollars to them next summer.

At the present time seven of the larger cities of the state have daylight saving. Rochester, however, continues on standard time, while Syracuse to the east, and Buffalo to the west, are on daylight saving time. It is expected that the exhibitors will organize for this campaign in the early fall and endeavor to bring about the adoption of some uniform law which will clarify the situation.

Policewoman Guests at A. M. P. A. Luncheon

Mrs. Mary Hamilton, New York policewoman, was the guest of honor and chief speaker at the weekly luncheon of the A. M. P. A. at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, last week. She told, among other things, of what she hoped to accomplish with "Lilies of the Street," the production she has just finished supervising for F. B. O. Mrs. Hamilton expressed herself as being opposed to censorship, except within the industry, and advocated changes in the admission of children to the picture houses. She thought the children should be admitted under the supervision of a competent theatre hostess.

Following the luncheon a jui-jitsu exhibition was given by Miss Girard, also of the Police Department, and her assistants.

Elliott Honor Guest at Luncheon

New Leader of Independents Pledges 100 Per Cent Cooperation With Play Date Bureau

DECLARING that the independent organization will wage a hard-hitting, vigorous campaign to compel a square deal for the independent picture producers, exhibitors and exchangemen, and pledging 100 per cent. cooperation with the Play Date Bureau, Frederick H. Elliott, who recently assumed his duties as executive manager of the I. M. P. P. D. A., told members of the organization that their cause was bound to win "because we have right and justice on our side as well as the courage to fight," at a luncheon-meeting held in his honor at the Hotel Astor in New York last week.

The meeting ratified a proposal of the new executive to change the title of the organization from "Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association," which he said was unwieldly and not sufficiently broad, to "Independent Motion Picture Association of America."

The members adopted a resolution expressing the deep regret of the Association and its individual members over the death of Harry M. Berman, general manager of Exchanges for F. B. O., who died June 18th, at his home in New York City.

The Elliott welcome luncheon was presided over by Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia, first vice president.

Mr. Elliott was the principal speaker. He declared his intention of conducting a vigorous offensive against the "Big Three" and their allies in the campaign to fight in the cause of the independents.

Frederick H. Elliott, newly elected General Manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America.

Mr. Elliott pledged himself to 100 per cent cooperation with the Play Date Bureau and called upon the members of his organization to give the M. P. T. O. A. agency every possible aid in its work.

"A united front, both here and with our allies, the theatre men, is absolutely essential to our success in the work that lies ahead of us," he said. "Ours is to be a constructive, not a destructive crusade, and we are going to pursue it with the greatest vigor. I have not had time to work out the details of our platform, but I wish to announce that we are going to fight fairly for our rights. Our campaign will be open and above board, with no hitting below the belt, but make no mistake that we will hit hard.

"Remember, the Liberty Bell was not cracked standing still and Paul Revere did not get his place in history merely as a jockey. Both are units and symbols of action in the war for liberty—and action and liberty are what we are going to have here."

The first copies of the Bulletin and other literature prepared by the Play Date Bureau of the Board of Trade and Commerce were distributed at the meeting and plans were discussed for future cooperation with the M. P. T. O. A. and the committee directing the Play Date Bureau.

It was announced that several accessory and equipment companies were anxious to affiliate with the Association and a committee consisting of H. W. Pearlman, Ray Johnston and Oscar A. Price was appointed to submit recommendations as to ways and means for admitting them to membership.

Upon recommendation of the membership committee, the Sierra Pictures, Inc., of Hollywood, and the Independent Film Corporation, of Philadelphia, were enrolled as members.

Paramount Founds Idea-Exchange

Claud Saunders Inventor of System for Exhibitor Co-operation in Planning Exploitation Campaigns

AN "idea-exchange" designed for the purpose of getting exhibitor viewpoints on all exploitation campaigns planned for their productions, has been established by Paramount. The system is the invention of Claud Saunders, head of the Paramount Division of Exploitation, and is said to have received the endorsement of leading exhibitors in several territories where the plan is now in operation.

The plan was introduced by Saunders at the Paramount International Convention, when he advanced the opinion that prominent exhibitors in every territory would welcome the opportunity for an open discussion on the subject of exploiting and publicizing Paramount pictures.

The idea has been developed and put into effect by having meetings of exhibitors at the exchange cities. The exhibitors are the invited guests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The sessions last from two to three days, according to the number of exhibitors who attend.

The purpose of this system is to develop exploitation campaigns which will apply effectively in all localities, as experience has shown that no iron-bound method of national exploitation can be successfully developed.

According to reports from Paramount the convention plan has worked out perfectly in every instance in which it has been applied. All of the conventions so far called have met with hearty response by the exhibitors invited to attend.

The usual program is to preview the current product, and those pictures in the Greater Forty available for screening. Following this, the convention discusses each picture individually, notes are taken, and when the exhibitors leave each is equipped with a thorough analysis of the pictures he is going to play, and a practical campaign for each picture worked out in detail, representing the combined experience of his and the other best exhibitor brains in the territory.

At the first of these conventions, held in the Paramount Kansas City branch under the direction of Earl Cunningham, local exploitation representative, William H. Wagner, Stanley Chambers, Glen Dickinson, Fred Fress, John H. Plumb, Fred Green, O. K. Mason, J. Earl Hayes, Harry Kiefer, Milton Feld, William Jacobs, and Frank Newman, Jr., attended. At the conclusion of the meeting the exhibitors sent Claud Saunders the following telegram:

"Please accept our thanks for the expoitation party given undersigned in Kansas City. We feel greatly benefited. We have been able to frame all our Fall campaigns from advance information furnished by you. Congratulations on the wonderful national tie-ups. Paramount has again taken an important step that more firmly than ever established its leadership."

After the meeting held in the Paramount St. Louis branch, R. E. Jarrett, Joe Hewitt, A. H. Whitney, O. E. Simon, C. L. Lindsay, Mr. and Mrs. McCutcheon, H. B. McFarland, C. E. Lilly, and J. J. Reilly sent the following wire to the Paramount home office:

"Consider exhibitors exploitation convention held here in St. Louis, with Mr. Gambrill, a huge success and of intense interest to the exhibitor. We look forward to next year's convention."

In Detroit the first meeting was so constructive that the exhibitors have asked Kenneth Renaud, exploitation representative, to hold similar meetings every other Wednesday.

One of the points that Claud Saunders has asked the representatives of his department to emphasize during these conventions is "that an exhibitor has an obligation to his public—to publicize his pictures so that the public may buy entertainment with the same assurance that they buy merchandise; knowing that they will get what they have been promised—to the end that public confidence will rest securely on the exhibitor's judgment of entertainment."

Loew Defines M.-G. Foreign Policy

Satisfied With Representation In England and France— Explains Purpose of Schiller's Mission Abroad

AN IMPORTANT statement on the theatre policy of the Loew interests abroad was issued this week by Marcus Loew, president of Loew's, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn. It follows:

"The recent departure for Europe of E. A. Schiller of our organization has caused comment in the trade press to the effect that it was our intention to start a wholesale theatre building policy in England and the continent. This of course is not the case, and while people on the inside know the facts, it seems advisable at this time to make the issue clear and our position equally plain.

"We do not intend to build any theatres in England because our films are being properly presented there. Three years ago we arranged with the owners of the Tivoli, London, to play our films. This arrangement has proved beneficial to us and also to the British exhibitors and the industry generally in England. We are therefore perfectly content with our present London situation.

"We recently became associated with the Gaumont Company in the operation of their exchanges and to assist in the management of their theatres in France. It was for this purpose that Mr. Schiller was sent abroad.

"We have no intention of erecting theatres anywhere in the world merely for the purpose of creating a competitive situation.

"Our purpose in this business is to improve it, and not to undermine other interests.

"We have no desire to build or own a theatre in any city which is adequately seated and properly equipped theatrically to present pictures as they reasonably should be exhibited. Indeed, we are not out looking for spots to build theatres at all, but rather to help the European public get the best entertainment if there are no facilities for their getting it today.

"It is only by companies of experience in theatre management and picture presentation taking an interest in exhibition throughout the world, that this industry can properly develop. That has been the experience in America, and we feel that the expansion of motion pictures abroad will come through progressive methods of presentation in adequate theatres.

"Where a foreign country is devoid of adequate houses, we shall attempt to convince local exhibitors that they ought to build proper theatres and we are ready to lend our resources to help build such theatres.

"Theatre owners abroad are capable of providing this amusement service for the public. We have no intention whatsoever of trespassing.

"I hope there will be no misconstruction of what I am saying. Our spirit is not competitive. Our desire is to keep hands off where things are recognizedly right. And to help with our resources and advice where they are admittedly wrong."

Ohio Sunday Ruling Is Challenged

Petition in Error Filed with Supreme Court in Chillicothe Sabbath Closing Case

THE long legal battle against the motion picture theater owners of the city of Chillicothe, Ohio, started several months ago when it was decided in that city that Sunday shows must go, has taken a new turn, following the filing of a petition in error in the supreme court of Ohio on the part of the owners of the theaters.

The petition in error, which was filed, is entered in the name of Earl Myers, plaintiff in error, against the State of Ohio. Other grounds set forth in the petition in error are concerned with the motion to quash and demurrers to the indictment and other questions arising in the legal part of the movie cases.

The appeal to the state supreme court was the direct outgrowth of a long fight in the Ross county courts against the showing of Sunday motion pictures in Chillicothe. The fight was brought about by the ministerial association of the county in an effort to make the old blue laws hold good. The effort failed, following the closing of the city for one Sunday, after which the shows opened and other places were permitted to operate as usual.

The entire affair centers around Earl Myers, John Kasier and Charles A. Smith, operators of theaters in the city. All were found guilty of violating the Ohio law that was interpreted by Judge Hornbeck to read 'guilty of exhibiting a theatrical performance on Sunday,' which in the judge's general charge was that a moving picture show is synonymous with a theatrical performance.

Judge Hornbeck, in his pronouncement, admitted that while the defendants took no part in selling tickets or operating the motion picture machine on the Sunday in question, yet he was present and he felt under those circumstances, the court must indulge in the presumption that he at least aided in the operation of a motion picture.

The men were fined $100.00 and costs in these cases and given suspended sentences of 60 days in jail each for operating their motion picture houses on Sunday. If they continue to operate on Sunday and the supreme court upholds the trial judge, they will be compelled to serve out the jail sentences. If they are given a clean bill of health in their appeal to the supreme court, they will escape other punishment. Indications are that they will take a chance and operate on Sunday.

North Carolina Elects Officers

Craver Made President at Wrightsville Convention— Spirit of Cooperation Prevails in Organization

R. D. CRAVER, of Charlotte, was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina at the semi-annual convention held at Wrightsville Beach, June 23-24, and featured by an address from R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A.

Many names were mentioned for the presidency but the executive committee, which had charge of the nomination of a slate of officers, finally narrowed the choice to two—Mr. Craver and Paul McCabe, of Tarboro, and the former was elected by vote of the delegates. Mr. McCabe was given the office of vice-president and F. A. Abbott was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Affiliation with the national organization was deferred for further consideration by North Carolina's board of directors. They will hold further conferences with national officers before taking action.

A spirit of general co-operation prevailed throughout the entire convention and expressions of satisfaction were heard on every hand with the outcome of the Milwaukee convention.

President Woodhull was cordially received when he spoke on the final day of the convention and was elected to honorary life membership as a token of appreciation. Sam Warner, of Warner Brothers, made one of the important speeches of the session.

The newly-elected board of directors follows:

Paul McCabe, Tarbore; Capt. C. L. Welch, Salisbury; R. D. Craver, Charlotte; Percy W. Wells, Wilmington; S. S. Stevenson, Henderson; Fuller Sams, Winston-Salem; M. S. Hill, Asheville; Charles Picquot, Pinehurst; A. B. Huff, High Point; J. A. Estridge, Gastonia; Claude Lee, Hickory; R. T. Wade, Morehead City.

The executive committee is composed of Messrs. Picquot, Stevenson, Sams, Welch and Hill. Pinehurst was elected as the mid-winter meeting place.

Cohen Announces Fair Play Bureau

Connecticut M. P. T. O. For Adjustment of Exhibitor Complaints; Re-Elects Joseph W. Walsh at Enthusiastic Convention

FORMATION of a bureau of Fair Play, as part of the M. P. T. O. A. Bureau of Trade and Commerce, was announced by Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the M. P. T. O. A. Board of Directors, at the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, held at the Hotel Garde, New Haven, June 23.

The Fair Play Bureau, Mr. Cohen said, was effectively adjusting and conciliating differences between theatre owners and distributors. The convention was one of the best attended meetings in the history of the organization.

State President Joseph W. Walsh, one of the Regional Vice Presidents of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided.

Leaders at Convention

National Treasurer L. M. Sagal, and Mr. Cohen, attended the convention together with George P. Aarons, Recording Secretary of the National Organization.

President Walsh rendered a report of the activities of the Connecticut Organization for the past year, reporting particularly on the legislative situation. Also an account of the Music Tax and arbitration matters. He spoke of the many adjustments that had been made for theatre owners by way of film and other service and the splendid cooperation they had given to the Post Office Department in its various campaigns. He told how the Postmaster General had shown the appreciation for this assistance in the recent Connecticut legislative campaign.

State Treasurer C. M. Maxfield read the financial report for the year, showing all obligations and commitments had been taken care of.

Sagal's Address

National Treasurer Sagal addressed his fellow Connecticut theatre owners on the national and state activities and urged the prompt payment of dues to both organizations. A committee was appointed to expedite the collection of these moneys in Connecticut.

George Stanton, City Passenger Agent of the New York Central Railroad, appeared at the meeting and spoke of the special tour that is being arranged from New York for the Los Angeles Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in June 1926 and gave a full itinerary of the trip, which met with much favor by those present.

Aarons Talks on Service

Mr. Aarons in his talk stressed the Public Service features of the theatre, showing the great progress that exhibitors had made along this line and urging a continuation and even greater interest in such efforts, pointing out the business dividends that accrue from such work. He spoke at length regarding the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors and pleaded that the strongest kind of support be given to them in the battle for independence.

Mr. Cohen spoke of the progress of the Board of Trade and Commerce inaugurated by the M. P. T. O. A. at the recent Milwaukee Convention and of the development of the Play Date Bureau. The Bureau of Fair Play, he said, is doing excellent work in bringing about a better understanding between theatre owners and distributors. Two recent occurrences Mr. Cohen mentioned were of special interest. One, a theatre owner in the Southwest, Mr. Cohen said, was unable to secure any film for his theatre because of the opposition of producer-distributor houses. He communicated with the Board of Trade and Commerce and through the affiliated producing and distributing members, this theatre owner has been offered sufficient quality independent film first run for his own houses. Another theatre owner in the Middle West advised that the prices he was being asked for independent film was so high it was impossible to contract for same. The Bureau of Fair Play took the matter up with the home office of the distributing company, one of their representatives was dispatched to gather the facts in the matter and an adjustment has now been made, one equally fair to the distributor and the theatre owner. Similar situations are being adjusted at this time in different parts of the country.

Harry M. Berman, former general manager of exchanges for F. B. O., whose death is mourned throughout industry.

In this connection Mr. Cohen requested that theatre owners having similar complaints, or complaints on any score, communicate immediately with the M. P. T. O. A. and their grievances will be turned over to the Board of Trade and Commerce so help and assistance of a definite nature can be brought to them. Mr. Cohen urged all theatre owners to bring their matters to the attention of this Bureau as it welcomes the opportunity of serving them. He also discussed the Greater Movie Season asking all theatre owners to cooperate and help in this relation. He suggested that every theatre owner do his bit to make it the Greatest Movie Season for the entire Industry, including himself and the independent producers and distributors.

Every theatre owner present signed a pledge card for Play Dates and agreed to increase his business for the coming season with independents.

Italian Production At Crisis

Government Aid Sought in Effort to Meet the Foreign Competition

THE motion picture industry in Italy, which had developed rapidly and had achieved a considerable measure of success, has, according to Commercial Attache H. C. MacLean in a recent report to the Department of Commerce, been in the throes of a severe crisis on account of its inability to meet foreign competition, not only abroad, but also in the local market. Italy possesses not only incomparable scenic advantages but also climatic conditions especially favorable to the production of films and at first had set an artistic standard that was exceptionally high as compared with the production of other countries. However, from the technical standpoint far more rapid progress has been made elsewhere, while money was spent too lavishly which, with the lack of efficient organization that exists, accounts for the present crisis. According to an article recently published in La Tribuna the number of films produced in Italy is decidedly limited and is not more than about twenty per annum.

The same article emphasizes the strength of the competition that is being felt from the American industry which has reached extraordinary perfection of organization and enjoys ample financial support while, at the same time, its local market is so vast that export business is a side issue and films can be sold abroad at prices which simply can not be met. Furthermore, it is admitted that American films have a quality of freshness and originality which makes a strong appeal to the masses while, on the other hand, Italian films are somewhat heavy.

The Italians admit that they can only hope to succeed by improving the quality of their films to a point where they can compete, not only in the local market, but also abroad. Italy alone does not present a sufficiently wide field to justify large productions, and even if foreign films were entirely excluded, the crisis would not be solved. Other markets must be exploited if the local industry is to develop.

The Italian producers are again appealing to the Government to support their efforts, pointing out not only the necessity for protecting those who are dependent upon the motion picture industry, but also the importance of the film as a means of propaganda and of making known to the world what Italy really is. While no indication has been given as to the character of the aid that may be granted, it seems probable that the elements that have brought about the continued crisis will be carefully studied and an attempt will be made to put the motion picture industry in Italy on a sound basis.

Rembusch Heads Indiana Exhibitors

Frank J. Rembusch was elected president of the Indiana M. P. T. O. and member of the National Executive Board at the annual meeting of the organization held at the Claypool Hotel in Indianapolis. M. J. Doody of Indianapolis was elected secretary, and Harry Koch of Indianapolis, treasurer.

Several matters of importance were considered at the meeting. The buying of pictures from independent producers, those who are not acquiring theatres in opposition to their customers, was endorsed. The uniform contract was condemned as being unfair and inequitable, especially the arbitration clause. The meeting recommended the right to cancel pictures of poor merit, asked that producers do not serve non-theatrical performances and endorsed the general idea of Greater Movie Season.

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures for Sol Lesser Houses

One of the biggest individual deals in the history of the industry has been consummated between Sol Lesser, of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn, whereby the entire Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product for 1925-26 will be played over the West Coast circuit.

There are 110 houses in the chain, and the deal is said to have involved over a million dollars in rentals. Joseph Goldberg, of West Coast, co-operated with Mr. Lesser in closing the contract.

Mr. Lesser, commenting on the deal, said he considered the Metro-Goldwyn output as being among the finest produced, and added that, in his opinion, 10 or 15 out of the 52 are worthy of being played for long runs at $2 top.

In many instances the Metro-Goldwyns will be given week runs in towns like Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose and Fresno. This was stipulated in the contract.

Yeggs Slay Patrolman Aiding Treasurer

Patrolman Patrick McGovern, who was escorting Treasurer George Haney of Lubliner and Trintz Pantheon Theatre, Chicago, was shot down and killed while defying three bandits who escaped with $4,000, two days' receipts of the theatre which the theatreman and policeman were taking to the bank.

This is the seventh policeman shot down in the performance of his duty in the last sixteen days and the authorities are making extraordinary efforts to apprehend the murderers. The Pantheon Theatre has suffered from robberies twice before within the last year, once when the safe was blown and once when Treasurer Haney was kidnaped in a taxi and relieved of the money he was conveying to the bank.

Alfred H. Varley Dies After Long Illness

$300,000 Suit Filed in Ohio Against Film Board and Others

JOHN ROMWEBBER, owner of the State Theatre, Akron, Ohio, has filed suit in the Federal District Court at Cleveland for $300,000 against five distributing companies, charging them with conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The petition names the Film Board of Trade, Pathe Exchange, Skirboll Gold Seal Prod., Progress Pictures Corp. and the Ohio Educational Exchange. Romwebber asserts that these companies conspired to cancel film contracts because of his refusal to accept certain pictures.

This is the first suit filed in Ohio as a protest against the operation methods of the Film Board of Trade and the Arbitration Board. Other cases of similar nature are about to be filed in Ohio, it is reported.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Film Board of Trade, stated that he was awaiting a transcript of the petition from attorneys in Cleveland. After its receipt, he expected to issue a statement.

Lewis Inerarity, of Pathe, said he had no knowledge of the case except from published stories, and therefore would make no comment. At Educational inquiries were referred to Mr. Pettijohn.

N.Y. Standard Code Operative Soon

New Building Regulations Effective July 1—State Troopers to Help Enforce Law

MANY motion picture theatre owners in New York state will probably be more or less affected by the new State Standard Building Code, which will become operative on July 1.

Along with the adoption of the new Standard Code, the issuing of the certificates of compliance with the law, which has been done by the state labor department, will fall to the lot of the New York State Troopers after July 1, except in certain specific instances, where the Industrial Commissioner will still be called upon to enforce the Code, make the inspections, and issue the certificates.

While the new Code will probably affect none of the more modern houses in the state, it will probably have a direct reaction upon the smaller theatre that is run by an irresponsible owner. One of the principal features of the new Code provides that on and after July 1, no place of public assemblage will be permitted in a building any part of which is used as a garage, dry cleaning establishment or other type of occupancy that may be deemed hazardous by the industrial commission.

Owing to the fact that there are 28 cities in New York state which have their own enforcing authorities, the State Troopers will have nothing to do with the enforcement of the provisions of the Code in these places. The State Industrial Commission, however, will furnish copies of the new Code to these cities at once and will look to the cities themselves to see that the Code is enforced to the letter. These cities are: Amsterdam, Auburn, Beacon, Canandaigua, Cohoes, Cortland, Dunkirk, Fulton, Gloversville, Hornell, Ithaca, Jamestown, Johnstown, Kingston, Lackawanna, Little Falls, Middletown, Norwich, Olean, Oneida, Oneonta, Oswego, Plattsburg, Rensselaer, Rome, Saratoga Springs, Sherrill, and Watervliet. In 20 cities in New York state, the building code of the city itself may be said to supersede the state code. This has come about through the enactment of legislation within the past year to exempt such cities from the standard building code.

These cities include New York city, Albany, Binghamton, Buffalo, Elmira, Lockport, Long Beach, Mount Vernon, Newburgh, New Rochelle, Niagara Falls, Poughkeepsie, Rochester, Schenectady, Syracuse, Troy, Utica, Watertown, White Plains and Yonkers.

The Industrial Commissioner himself will enforce the new state code in Batavia, Corning, Geneva, Glen Cove, Glens Falls, Hudson, Mechanicville, North Tonawanda, Ogdensburg, Port Jervis, Salamanca, and Tonawanda.

The New York State Troopers will enforce the new Code in all towns and villages in the state where there is no authority to enforce a building code.

The provisions and regulations governing projection booths are not changed in the new Code. While considerable space has been given to such matter, the section itself has been taken, unchanged, from the general business law of 1913, and fitted into the Code.

Other provisions specify that exits must be not less than 44 inches in width, and that each floor of a theatre must be provided with the following number of exits: not less than two where the capacity is from 100 to 500 persons, not less than three where the capacity is from 501 to 700, and not less than four where the capacity is 700 persons or more. The aggregate width of exits on any floor must be not less than 36 inches to each 100 persons capacity. Capacity is determined by the number of fixed seats plus allowance of one person for every three square feet where standing room is possible. In case benches without arms between seats are used, their capacity must be figured on the basis of not more than one person to each 18 inches in width. In cases where fixed seats are not provided, such capacity must be based on one person for each six square feet of floor area.

Where exit stairs from any floor terminate on the main floor, then the aggregate width of exits on the main floor shall be increased so as to provide for not less than 100 per cent of the capacity of such stairways.

Not more than 14 seats will be permitted in any row extending from one aisle to another, nor more than seven in any row extending from an aisle to a wall. Theatres using printed programs must print thereon a diagram of each floor showing the location of the exits.

Some latitude is permitted by the code which provides that where strict adherence to the conditions set forth work an unnecessary hardship, the party affected may petition the Industrial Board for a modification as provided in section 30 of the Labor Law.

Copies of the new Code are being printed and will be available soon for general distribution.

Famous Offers Common Stock Issue

Corporation Has Paid Over $14,300,000 in Dividends Since 1919, According to Letter to Stockholders

FAMOUS Players-Lasky Corporation has paid over $14,300,000 in dividends since 1919, according to a letter to stockholders in connection with offerings of new common stock at $90 a share to stockholders. Earnings of the common stock for the last five years have been equal to $89.63 a share, or an average of $17.92 a share. The earnings for the first six months of this year are considerably ahead of the same period last year, according to the statement of Adolph Zukor, president.

The letter to stockholders states that the proceeds of the common stock now being issued will be used in the development and expansion of the business. It continues as follows:

"There are outstanding at present 83,000 shares of preferred and 243,431 shares common. After issue of present offering there will be outstanding 365,146 shares common and an additional 77,153 shares of authorized common will be reserved for conversion of the preferred.

"Balance sheet as of December 27, 1924, shows net assets of $31,647,061, to which should be added proceeds of present issue of common, making a total of over $42,000,000. In the last six years over $18,000,000 has been spent by the company and its subsidiaries in fixed assets and amortization of mortgages and retirement of preferred stock.

"All bank loans were paid off December 27, leaving $2,700,000 in cash on hand. In 1924 peak of bank loans was $4,900,000 and in 1923 was $5,875,000.

"Twenty years ago moving pictures were a curiosity. Today there are about 18,000 movie theatres in the United States and more than $550,000,000 is paid annually for admissions. Capital invested in the industry is more than $1,250,000,000.

"The foreign business of the company is growing very rapidly in importance and has practically doubled in the last five years. In spite of this the foreign field is still relatively undeveloped. During the first three months of 1925 the foreign gross business showed an increase of 25% over the 1923 period, the best year heretofore. Famous now has its own selling and distributing branches known as film exchanges in practically every large city all over the world. Paramount pictures can be seen in every civilized country.

"The greater part of the inventory is composed of negative and positive films. After a picture is finished it is carried on the books at actual production cost, including an allowance for overhead. Of this cost 80% is allocated to United States and Canada. Within three months after a picture is released 60% of inventory cost allocated in this country is written off, and at the end of a year 90% is written off. Foreign countries are assigned 20% of cost, a portion of which is written off in first year. The entire cost of a picture is written off by the end of the second year.

"At end of March, 1925, inventory totaled $15,450,000, of which $7,650,000 represented residual value of pictures already released; $5,225,000 represented completed pictures not released; $1,975,000 represented work in process, supplies, etc., and $600,000 represented rights. Against the above item of residual value of pictures released there is an estimated unplayed business of $19,150,000, or a ratio of one to two and a half. A large part of this sum is represented by signed contracts with exhibitors."

F.P.-L. Buys Out Wilmer & Vincent

Large Chain Acquisition Expected to Be Followed by Others—Theatre Map Changing Rapidly

THOUGH official announcement has not yet been made, it is understood on excellent authority that Famous Players-Lasky has purchased the important Wilmer & Vincent theatre chain, comprising 16 houses in Pennsylvania. The consideration involved is placed at $4,500,000.

This is the second large chain purchased by Paramount within recent weeks, the other being the Gordon circuit in New England. It would not be surprising if Famous Players also took over at least one other large circuit shortly—perhaps more.

The Wilmer & Vincent Pennsylvania chain comprises the following theatres: Colonial, Rialto, Lyric and Orpheum, Allentown; Colonial, Bethlehem; Orpheum and Colonial, Easton; Colonial, Victoria, Majestic, Orpheum, Capitol and Strand, Harrisburg; Capitol, Hippodrome and Rajah Temple, Reading.

Negotiations were closed also for the erection of a Paramount theatre in Birmingham, Ala., to cost $1,500,000, with seating capacity of 3,000. The building will include stores and will be located at Third avenue and Eighteenth street.

In New York State, circuit activity continued. The Genesee Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., which operates a chain of seven houses in Western New York, has bought the site of the Community Theatre in Batavia. It is expected the present building will be replaced by a theatre and hotel. The company is negotiating for four more houses upstate.

Nikitas Dipson, president of the Genesee concern, said the Batavia purchase was the first step in a plan to have fifty houses in the circuit by January.

A. H. Schwartz, prominent Brooklyn exhibitor, will, it is reported, build a number of theatres in Long Island towns, Huntington, Freeport and Corona among them. He has already announced new projects for Flushing and Avenue U, Brooklyn. The Schwartz chain at present includes the Farragut, Albemarle, Merrick Rialto, New Linden, Kingsway, and Century. He built the Gramatan in Mount Vernon, N. Y., which was later taken over by Loew.

Out in the Middle West, the Gary Theatre Co. is building a 3,000 seat house to be known as the Palace, at Gary, Ind.

The Comerford Amusement Company, whose chain now includes about a hundred theatres, has awarded the contract for the erection of a new theatre in Hazelton, Pa., to seat 2,700. Comerford is also building a 1,600 seat house in Old Forge, a suburb of Scranton.

The sale was announced this week of the Hippodrome Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., at a reported price of $255,000. The purchase was made by a real estate dealer for interests whose identity was not disclosed. It is believed, however, that he was acting for a corporation operating a chain of theatres. The new owner will take possession July 15. The house seats 1,200.

Considerable building is going on in San Francisco. The newest announcement is of three houses, two of which will be Class C and the other Class A. The latter will be built by Anthony Milano for George Lagomarsino at Mission and Oliver streets. Ruegg Bros. have let the contract for a small theatre on San Bruno avenue. A new $300,000 theatre will be built for Samuel Levin near Polk Street and Broadway. There will be 20 stores and apartments in the structure.

A new theatre of Moorish design will be erected immediately on Polk, north of Green, San Francisco, at a cost of $350,000, it was announced by J. R. Miller and T. L. Pflueger, architects. The owners are T. & D. Junior Enterprises, Inc. Nasser Brothers, associated with T. & D. in the operation of this and other theatres, including the Royal on Polk Street, are owners of the Castro Theatre, one of the principal neighborhood houses, which will celebrate its third anniversary on June 22.

The various associated interests in this enterprise, operating in some districts with another large circuit headed by Robert A. McNeil and E. H. Emmick, own altogether close to 50 theatres in Northern California. Occupying a lot of 100 x 150 feet, the theatre will seat 1,750 persons. Its frontage will be taken up by the entrance, flanked by two modern shops.

Many German Producers Active

Ufa, Westi and Other Leading Producers Are Planning More Extensive Programs Than in the Past

By Heinrich Fraenkel of Berlin.

IN my last article I gave all noteworthy particulars about the forthcoming Ufa productions which amount to as many as 33 for the first half of this season. Here are some details about the other German companies' plans of productions:

Next to Ufa, one of the biggest German concerns and naturally the one enjoying most international (within Europe) connections is Westi Film Co., a company which is well known to be backed by capital of Stinnes who was by far the richest of the German industrial magnates. Westi has several producing units at work in different European countries. In Berlin Victor Jansen has been booked on a long term contract. In Paris (where the company cooperates with Pathé) a film "Vertige" (taken from the play by Charles Méré) has just been started, produced by Robert Pequi and starring the well known French character player Nicolai Volin.

The season's first Pathe-Westi production was "Yokaste," taken from the famous novel by Anatole France and directed by Ravel. The next one will be called "The Czar's Curier" (adapted from Jules Verne and produced by Victor Turschansky). The next on the list will be produced by Henri Fescourt, the story having been taken from Victor Hugo's famous novel "Les Miserables."

As to Westi's Italian productions, the first one, a Sonya Gallone picture, has been finished already. It will probably be called "Riding Through Flames." Apart from that, Westi have a producing unit of their own in Sweden. The firm is called "Nordwesti," and they have just started production of "Jerusalem," Selma Lagerlöf's famous story. V. Hemberg is directing the film; Conradt Veidt and Jenny Hasselquist are playing leads.

Another one of the big German film concerns is "Phoebus Films" who handle all Metro-Goldwyn productions in this country and who are lately also strongly going in for the exhibiting side of the business, controlling close to 30 big theatres already in this country. This company too has several producing units at work, and they will turn out some twenty pictures within the season. Most of them will be big modern features, such as "Der Leibgardist," taken from the famous play by Ferenz Molnar. Walter Jonas is writing the scenario. Robert Wiene (producer of Caligari), is directing the film, and Maria Corda (known in the U. S. A. from the Austrian production "Moon of Israel") is playing lead.—Luciano Albertini, the well known stuntist, who has been connected with Universal for a time, furnishes four productions. The producers of the other films are Fred Sauer, Carl Wilhelm and Robert Dinesen, the authors: Walter Jonas and Curt T. Braun.

As to the independent German producers, special mention should be made of Hans Neumann who is adapting "Casanova" on a very lavish scale, and of Carl Grune who has just finished for Stern Films a big modern feature, called "Jealousy," and starring Lya de Putti.

One of the best known German stars is Henny Porten, who is starring in three or four big modern productions of her own company.

Another highly renowned German star and stuntist is Harry Piehl, who is co-operating with Gaumont of Paris and who is also going to produce the play lead in at least three or four big productions in the course of the year.

The Vienna Pan Film Co. is just embarking on a big adaption of the famous opera "Der Rosenkavalier," by Richard Strauss. The film is directed by Robert Wiene, the producer of "Caligari," who has above been mentioned to be booked for Phoebus Films later on in the season.

Joe May, one of the most famous of the German producers, has finished his biggest and most ambitious production, called "Texas Farmer." The world rights of the film, although it is an independent production, are handled by Ufa. The picture will, however, not be released before the fall. In the meantime, Joe May will probably go to America to have a general look round.

Jay Marchant Will Make Columbia Series

President Joe Brandt and production manager Harry Cohn of Columbia Pictures have engaged Jay Marchant to make a series of six new Perfection Pictures for them. These six in the order of their release dates will be "Fighting Youth," "The Speed Demon," "The New Champion," "The Great Sensation," "A Fight to a Finish" and "The Handsome Brute."

William Fairbanks will be the star of the series, while the feminine leads will be taken care of by Edith Roberts, Lotus Thompson and Phyllis Haver. Other screen players who will take parts in the pictures are Lloyd Whitlock, Pat Harmon, Tom Carr, Frank Hagney, Johnny Fox, William Norton Bailey, Marion Court, Bob Kortman, George French, Bert Appling, Florence Lee, Tom Ricketts, Robert Bolder, Jack Britton and Al Kaufman.

Wesley Ruggles Directs Laura Jean Libbey Picture

Wesley Ruggles will direct "When His Love Grew Cold," the first of the Laura Jean Libbey novels to be put on the screen by F. B. O. The script is being prepared by Gertrude Orr and casting will be started as soon as it is finished. It is expected the picture will go into production within the next two weeks. Several others of Miss Libbey's novels are to be filmed by F.B.O.

Whitman Bennett to Make Ten for Arrow

Whitman Bennett will sponsor only ten of the pictures of the Golden Arrow franchise instead of twenty-four, as recently announced in error.

In Milwaukee, where previously there was only an office for the city salesman, the new exchange opened this year has been completely reconstructed and is now in operation at 721 Wells Street with Manager John Lorontz in charge. This office will serve the exhibitors in the vicinity of Milwaukee and also many of the Wisconsin towns formerly handled through the Chicago exchange.

The Cincinnati office, located at 514 Elm Street with Manager Rudolph Knoepfle in charge, has been altered and reconstructed so that the enlarged space will be ample to take care of the increased business in this territory.

Automobile Spring Manufacturer Made President of Reorganized Companies

AT a reorganization meeting held during the week in New York, L. A. Young of the L. A. Young Industries, large automobile spring manufacturers, with offices in Detroit was elected president of Tiffany, Truart, Carlos and Renown organizations and an additional $250,000 of cash capital was added to the finances of the organizations for the furtherance of production activities.

Young was in conference for several days with M. H. Hoffman and A. Carlos before the reorganization was affected. By the new arrangement Carlos becomes secretary of Tiffany, Truart, Carlos and Renown, and Hoffman remains vice-president and general manager.

Weekly Edition of Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

Productions listed are new pictures on which reports were not available previously.

For ratings on current and older releases see MOTION PICTURE NEWS—first issue of each month.

KEY—The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage rating of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

Mounted posted paper was used to good advantage in building up a strong lobby "flash" by R. M. Kennedy at the Royal theatre, Birmingham, Ala., on "That Devil Quemado" (F. B. O.).

Book and Cosmetic Tie-ups on "The Great Divide"

Charles Glickauf, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, attracted attention to the showing of "The Great Divide" when this picture played recently at the Strand theatre in Evansville, Ind., by tying up three book stores, two drug stores, three music stores and the public library and its nineteen branches with the showing.

Copies of the book were featured in the window displays contributed by the book stores, while cosmetics were featured by the drug stores. Copies of the song "West of the Great Divide" were prominently exhibited by the music stores, and the piece was also featured in the program at the Strand throughout the week. Art cards and stills were posted in the library and its branches.

Four thousand three hundred pay envelopes printed with an announcement of the showing were distributed by thirty factories and three leading department stores, and 1,000 heralds were given away on the streets. Extra space was taken in the papers, and the town was lavishly posted. There was also a special lobby display.

Frankness of "Greed" Told in San Diego Campaign

"Greed" recently played at the Pantages theatre in San Diego, Cal., and was given a brief but vigorous campaign confined to the press and to a special lobby display. The entire campaign exploited the brutal frankness of the picture, and characterized the production in all ads appearing in the press as a photoplay entirely different from the usual run of pictures by reason of its thorough-going realism.

Eight oil paintings were placed on display in the lobby and a twenty-four sheet cutout was mounted above the marquee for the first time in the history of the town. Three-sheet and six-sheet cut-outs were used inside the lobby, and the town was liberally posted.

Photographs of the audiences which turned out for the opening night were used in the press on the following day.

H. W. Lawrence, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, and Manager J. S. Rice of the Pantages theatre, cooperated on this campaign.

"Dressmaker From Paris" Given Double Display

Prior to the opening of "The Dressmaker From Paris" at the Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Manager Barry Burke had a show window built in the foyer, which was a replica of the window display arranged by the local merchant cooperating on the style show staged in connection with the photoplay. Everything in the theatre display was on a miniature scale, with tiny models dressed in gowns, duplicates of those originally used in the shop windows. Even the hand painted display cards and cut-outs were copied in miniature. This proved a real novelty, which netted both theatre and merchant valuable publicity.

With the aid of the ladies' ready-to-wear shop, an interesting style show was put on, with three models appearing twice daily, exhibiting the latest in feminine apparel.

In addition to the window display, the merchant's newspaper advertising carried special mention of the style show in connection with the picture, a point played up strongly in the theatre's ads.

Imprinted Paper Napkins for "Charley's Aunt"

Something simple, inexpensive and remarkably effective in the way of exploitation was put over by the Isis theatre in Topeka, Kansas, for their showing of "Charley's Aunt."

In a special arrangement with all of the big popular downtown restaurants, the theatre management furnished their week's supply of crepe paper napkins in the center of which was a regular advertisement for "Charley's Aunt" printed in blue ink, in newspaper style.

This idea may be duplicated anywhere as the restaurant managers will be glad to get a supply of napkins free of charge.

Manager G. P. Banniza of the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn., gave "Playing with Souls" (First National) a strong lobby display as illustrated here. Cut-out heads and banners were used to good advantage.

"The Lady" is Campaigned During Mothers' Week

Manager H. Browning of the Olympia theatre, New Haven, booked "The Lady," for showing during Mothers' Day Week, because Miss Talmadge in this production, plays a mother role yet depicted on the screen. He prepared a special program of "Mother's Musical Memories" in connection with the feature. Among the songs rendered were "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "The Old Gray Bonnet," "When You and I Were Young," and "Home Sweet Home," sung by Helen Marek.

He advertised the program as suitable for Mothers' day in his newspaper advertising, in the program and in the official score card for the New Haven Baseball Exhibition Co., Inc., of the Eastern League.

Rowley Gives 'White Moth' Thorough Campaign

Some clever e ploitation work was done by Manager Jack Rowley of the Royal theatre, Laredo, Texas, in putting over "The White Moth." Manager Rowley is one of those live and wideawake movie managers who believes in resorting to all kinds of stunts to attract the attention of his patrons and get them into his playhouse.

He did not stop at mere exploitation of the picture through trailers and slides on the screen of the Royal theatre, augmented by lithographs and stands of pictures inside and outside the spacious lobby, but he enlisted the services of a famous Mexican jazz orchestra that was passing through Laredo from Mexico to begin an engagement with the Keith circuit to take a place on the program during the afternoon showing on Sunday, and also a famous Mexican soprano to do the prologue stunt in the evening. These added attractions served to interest the movie-goers in the program at the Royal theatre on the opening date.

Lobby display on the Educational Film Exchanges special two-reeler "Balto's Race to Nome," arranged by the manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Manager Rowley arranged an attractive cut-out of Barbara LaMarr, put a pair of massive white and gold wings on the cut-out and had it connected with a motor taken from an oscillating fan, with the result that the movable wings attracted much attention as the cut-out occupied a place in the large main entrance door of the Royal theatre. Then he made a cut-out from a one-sheet lithograph and placed it in the centre of the attractive display window of "La Moderna" dry goods store of Shapu & Frelich, this cut-out being surrounded by ladies' ready-to-wear and attracting much attention from passersby.

Girls in Runabout Act as "Man and Maid" Ballyhoo

A runabout, appropriately decorated with hearts, banners, pennants, etc., carrying two girls, one of whom was dressed as a boy in Tuxedo evening dress and a high hat, recently appeared on the streets of Los Angeles distributing heralds which exploited the showing of "Man and Maid" at Loew's State theatre. This couple stopped at corners and did a brief loving act in pantomime that attracted sensational attention. On the opening Sunday this couple worked the beaches and the ball game, and spent the rest of the week in the vicinity of the theatre with excellent results. Five thousand heralds were distributed during the week. This tie-up with the automobile concern was achieved by Eddy Eckels and H. W. Lawrance, Metro-Goldwyn exploiters. Ray Coffin, publicity director for the West Coast theatres, co-operated in this drive.

An 18-foot balloon, an exact replica of the regular army observation kite balloons, was flown from the roof of Loew's State every day throughout the showing from 10 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night. The balloon and its two banners, one reading "Elinor Glyn's 'Man and Maid'," and the other "Now, Loew's State," could be seen for blocks and created enormous interest, many people coming down into the busy section to be able to read the banners and so discover what it was all about. At night the balloon and its banners were illuminated by a powerful army search light.

Striking Colored Display on "Quo Vadis" Showing

A colored box display that received much comment from his patrons was arranged by the manager of the Strand theatre in Milwaukee for the showing of "Quo Vadis."

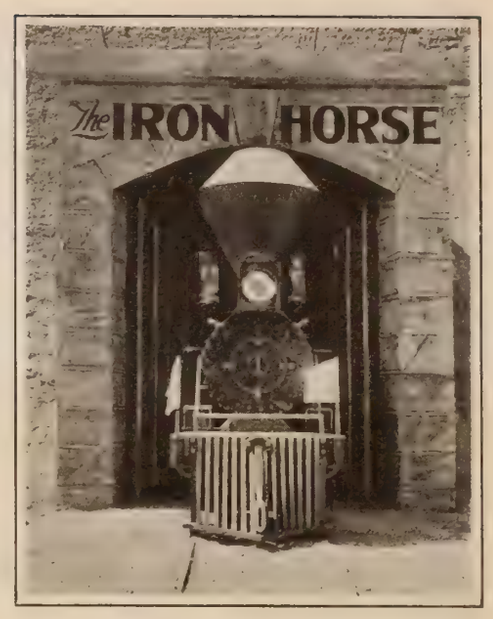
The display consisting of a view of a section of the Roman Coliseum, with lions springing up to reach a Christian maiden, while at the other end Nero is seen fiddling while Rome burns, was done in brilliant colors. The box was electrically lighted by concealed lamps and attracted attention.

Old Fashioned Ballyhoos Boost "The Denial"

The screen contest now being conducted by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the Coast in collaboration with the Los Angeles Express is winning a great deal of exploitation, as the entire string of Dixon-Kellog papers, comprising 14 dailies in Los Angeles and the vicinity, are carrying front page publicity on it. The contest has been tied up by Eddie Eckles and H. D. McBride, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteers, with the showing of "The Denial" at Loew's State.

The old Sears-Roebuck auto-buggy used in "The Denial" was used as a street ballyhoo with excellent effect. A banner six feet by three hung from the top of this auto-buggy reading on one side "This horseless carriage may look funny and it is funny in 'The Denial', now at Loew's State," and, on the other, "This horseless carriage is a full-fledged star in support of Claire Winsor in 'The Denial' at Loew's State theatre." The driver distributed 6,000 heralds to the curious crowds that congregated about the car.

A girl dressed in the style of 1897 paraded the street with an umbrella upon which was a sign reading "Come with me to 'The Denial' at Loew's State theatre." Her quaint garb caused much comment and created vast interest on the downtown streets.



A fashion show contrasting the styles featured in the photoplay with modern dress was used as a stage presentation, and proved popular. Slides and trailers were used and fifty 24-sheets were posted. One hundred and fifty photos were displayed with suitable advertising material in windows.

Doormen of Denver Exploit Run of "Last Laugh"

When "The Last Laugh" played the American theatre, Denver, Manager H. E. Long conceived the novel idea of enlisting the doormen of the city in his behalf. Since this production is concerned with an aged doorman in a Berlin hotel, Long figured that the men who open carriage doors in his city would be especially interested in the film.

Consequently he wrote a letter to every hotel in Denver and to every department store or business which had a doorman. The letter requested the management of these establishments to send on a certain day the doorman of their place to a special showing of "The Last Laugh." The letter requested that the doorman be there in uniform too. A picture was taken of these dignitaries in all their glory and was run in the newspapers of the city.

In addition to getting a good story on his engagement, he also made sure that the doormen knew of the picture. Then when anyone asked them what show to see in town—as strangers stopping at a hotel often do—they would be likely to recommend "The Last Laugh."

Public highway display advertising the showing of "The Iron Horse" (Fox) at Grauman's Egyptian theatre, Hollywood. The tunnel and engine are brilliantly lighted at night.

Picturesque Lobby Painted for "Sans Gene" Showing

Realizing the possibilities offered by the backgrounds in "Mme. Sans Gene," Manager F. J. Miller conceived a novel and arresting display for the Modjeska lobby, Augusta, Ga.

Against a background painted with trees and shrubbery was depicted the terrace of a French chateau with its approach of stone steps, flanked on either side with a low wall. At the head of the steps was a small cut-out of the star as "Mme. Sans Gene," standing between two vases filled with greens. Trees along the stone wall added a touch of beauty to the scene. This miniature display, mounted in a shadow box and illuminated by various colored lights had a tremendous drawing power.

In addition to the standard campaign and the distribution of 500 rotos and 500 Swanson postcards to special mailing list, including women's clubs and civic organizations, several excellent window displays were secured in which 8x10 stillboards were used.

Juvenile Dog Contest Aids "Lighthouse by the Sea"

Manager Harry Hardy's recent dog contest in connection with his showing of "The Lighthouse By the Sea," at the Alhambra, proved a veritable sensation in Charlotte, N. C.

Dog blankets with lettering "Rin-Tin-Tin in The Lighthouse By the Sea—Alhambra—now" were given to the contestants in addition to a free ticket to see the picture. Prizes of $1.00 in cash were given for the dog most resembling "Rin-Tin-Tin," the smartest dog, the largest, the smallest, the prettiest and the ugliest dog.

Eighty dogs were entered in the contest, and on the opening day of picture these entrants were paraded throughout the business section each carrying a blanket on the attraction. This stunt brought the title before the public repeatedly in a manner calculated to gain the attention of everyone.

Many electric bulbs, flats stippled with a half-dry sponge and paint, and special artwork combined to make up Frank Steffy's attractive lobby display on "If I Marry Again" (First National) at the Coliseum theatre, Seattle.

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES

Sixth Annual Announcement

1925 1926

Never since motion pictures entered the present era of elaborate productions have Short Subjects occupied a more important position in the building of programs--the presentation of Quality Diversified Entertainment.

Side by side with the reaction against overlong, padded features has come a better appreciation of the public's interest in the comedies and other Short Subjects that constitute such a big part of every Well Balanced Program.

There follow as a matter of course more recognition of the true box-office value of good pictures in the briefer lengths and a greater demand for QUALITY SHORT SUBJECTS.

Educational, eminently qualified to meet this demand, will do so in the coming season with a program that not only is bigger than any it has presented before, but offers unquestionably the greatest attraction values ever found in any line-up of one and two-reel pictures.

The basis of the whole policy of Educational Pictures is the firm conviction that every item on the Showman's program should not only entertain his patrons but make money for him -- the Short Subjects as well as the longer features. Educational's offerings for 1925-1926 are replete with names that mean cash at the box-office -- stars such as Lupino Lane, Lige Conley, Johnny Arthur, Bobby Vernon, Walter Hiers, Jimmie Adams, Bill Dooley and Neal Burns, under the directorial supervision of such comedy geniuses as Jack White and Al Christie. The amount of "added profit" that Educational Pictures will make for you is limited only by your own efforts in advertising and exploiting them.

Stars of New Educational Program

BOBBY VERNON

For years one of the mainstays of the Christie comedy organization, Bobby Vernon has consistently maintained his place among the outstanding personalities of the screen. His position today is assured for he commands a large following among the screen patrons and enjoys the utmost respect of comedy producers as a player having a firm grasp of screen technic and one endowed with exceptional native talents for mimicry and characterization.

Vernon is listed among the leading stars who will contribute to the Educational program for next season. He will make a series of 6 two-reel comedies, all of which are to be produced at the Christie studios under the supervision and direction of the men who developed his talents as a comedy actor

WALTER HIERS

During the past year Walter Hiers, Educational comedy star, faced one of the most difficult tasks which could be cut out for an actor. He had made a reputation as a feature star, and his acquisition by the producers of short comedies was widely exploited as one of the big events of the year. After an advertising campaign which promised everything, Hiers set out to live up to the reputation and the great expectations engendered by the advance notices. That he was able not only to satisfy the whetted appetites of exhibitors and screen fans but beyond that to make appreciable advances in popularity is something which must always stand to his credit and glory.

He continued to make new friends among the fans and the success of his films emphasized the value of continuing him in a series of comedies under his own name.

BILLY DOOLEY

Billy Dooley, well known to vaudeville audiences for his amusing capers in a sketch called "The Misfit Sailor," is a screen "find" of no less an authority on comedy films than Al Christie, who sought him out after witnessing his act on the stage. It was not long before Christie had Dooley's signature to a contract to devote himself exclusively to screen comedies, and a short period spent in general stock was all that was necessary to equip Dooley for featured parts.

Dooley will alternate with Neal Burns as the leading funmaker in the series of ten Christie Comedies.

JIMMIE ADAMS

There will be many to applaud the elevation of Jimmie Adams to stardom in a series of six two-reel comedies, which are to form an important part of Educational's 1925-26 schedule. For over three years Adams has been prominent in Educational comedies produced by Christie. During that time he has been called upon to essay the most difficult sort of comedy roles and in every instance he has scored an individual hit. His work in the last two series of Christie Comedies led to his promotion.

He has started work on the first offering in the series. It is being directed by Harold Beaudine.

NEAL BURNS

Neal Burns is a veteran of the screen and one of the most consistent comedy performers the photoplay has developed. He has appeared in more than one hundred and fifty pictures. He is completing his ninth year with the Christie organization, a most enviable record for any comedian to boast. During this long career Burns has kept himself in the forefront of the comedy stars, working with sincere purpose and exceptional skill in putting over comedy effects.

His assignment for the coming season is the important task of playing star in five of the ten Christie Comedies which Educational will release.

VERA STEADMAN

Vera Steadman is one of the favorite leading ladies of the short comedies. Since entering pictures several seasons ago as a member of the Keystone company, Miss Steadman has played opposite many of the most prominent comedy stars. With the Christie company she has figured importantly for a long time, though the fact is that she is still a young woman, like many other screen players, she is a "veteran" actress.

Miss Steadman will be seen next season as the lead in support of the Educational stars sponsored by Christie.

Five Stores Tie Up to Aid "Oh, Doctor" Campaign

New Haven, Conn., was thoroughly tied-up for a recent showing of "Oh, Doctor!" at the Globe theatre. Between them, Ed Raffile, manager of the house, and Phil Kahn, Universal exploiteer, secured the co-operation of Loft's candy store, Liggett's drug store, Shastenberg store, New Haven Union, and New Haven Times-Leader.

Loft's furnished 5,000 packages of "Love Pills" and 5,000 "Oh, Doctor Kisses," which were distributed by dressed girls in nurses' uniforms.

The drug store enclosed 5,000 prescription blanks advertising "Oh, Doctor" with packages as they were wrapped up. A window was also used to display the book and medical apparatus.

Of the two newspapers, the Union started a 12-weeks limerick contest with a set of rhyms on "Oh, Doctor," and the Times-Leader ran a prescription contest for the best old-fashioned home remedies.

Cipher Lobby Message for "Marriage in Transit"

In his recent exploitation of "Marriage in Transit," Manager J. H. McLaughlin of the Franklin theatre, Tampa, used a cipher contest which proved a triumph.

With the co-operation of the Citizens Bank & Trust company, a beaverboard poster was placed outside the bank on which was printed the following:

"What did the bride say to the groom while being married in transit? Code message—the first 25 people to cipher this message correctly will receive two tickets each to see Edmund Lowe and Carole Lombard in "Marriage in Transit" at the Franklin theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, April 29-30th. Mail answers to Franklin theatre.

The cipher message with its accompanying "key" drew crowds every hour of the day, many people copying the message and key code to work it out in their homes or offices.

Man dressed in armor as a street ballyhoo for "The Iron Man" (Universal), used by G. W. Speakman of the Palladium, Liverpool, England.

The correct solution was: Open our joint account at the Citizens Bank—The big bank at the big building.

Over 200 correct answers were recieved at the theatre, which with the bank scored heavily in the publicity resulting from the stunt.

Manager McLaughlin received high praise for the idea, the Citizens Bank going so far as to write him a letter complimenting him on the stunt, and further stating that several of their patrons had commented favorably on the code used in the advertisement. Many young college men found the code useful in writing notes to their young lady friends.

"Kiss in the Dark" Lobby Visualizes Title

Manager F. J. Miller's display in the Modjeska lobby, Augusta, Ga., for "A Kiss in the Dark," was an excellent visualization of the title.

Set in a shadow box was a miniature display depicting a garden scene at night with a man and woman sitting on a bench kissing.

A sky of twinkling stars and a large laughing moon shining directly on the lovers added a touch of romance. Perched in one of the trees, an owl blinked knowingly at the couple. The owl's eye was equipped with a flasher socket, while the entire exhibit was illuminated by a dark blue spot, giving an extremely realistic night effect.

A prominently located vacant store window was pressed into service on this attraction, the glass front being entirely painted over with only a small opening in the center for a "peep hole." In this window was placed a silhouette cutout of a couple kissing with an 8 x 10 stillboard, the latter dimly lighted by a baby spot. Directly above the "peep hole" was the wording: "Kiss in the Dark." This window drew crowds and proved a real publicity getter for the picture at the Modjeska.

Novelty Dodger Proves Aid to "Cheaper to Marry"

A feature of Manager D. Roscoe Faunce's campaign on "Cheaper to Marry" at the Strand, Birmingham, was the distribution of a novelty dodger, printed red on white as follows: Wait! Anyone contemplating a plunge into matrimony would do well to visit the STRAND any day next week and see if it is "Cheaper to Marry" for marriage is a game of "Give and Take"—give up your freedom and take the consequences.

The regular newspaper and billing campaign was augmented by teaser ads in the local newspapers a week prior to opening.

Window in the Bohm-Allen Jewelry store in Denver, one of the high-grade stores of the city, for the showing at the Colorado theatre of "Quo Vadis" (First Nat'l). The Roman friezze and bust were borrowed from the public library.

Imprinted Envelopes Boost "Daddy's Gone a-Hunting"

"Daddy's Gone a-Hunting" was exploited when it played recently at the American theatre in Evansville, Ind., by the distribution of 4,200 pay envelopes, each printed with a cut and an announcement of the showing. These envelopes were distributed by thirty of the best factories in the city and three of the leading department stores. Charles Glickauf, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, achieved the tie-up.

Two striking window displays helped exploit the picture also. The first of these tied up the title of the photoplay with a display of sporting goods and the second featured candies specially suited to carrying on hunting trips for nourishment and refreshment. One thousand heralds were distributed and the town was liberally posted. Slides and trailers were brought into play at the American and at other theatres in the city, and fifty window cards were exhibited in stores throughout the loop district.

A vigorous newspaper campaign supported these, and there was also a special lobby display.

Jockeys on Street Exploit "The Dixie Handicap"

"The Dixie Handicap" was recently exploited in Lorain, O., where this picture played at the Ohio theatre, by the appearance of two young men in jockey costumes on horses on the main streets. Both carried banners announcing the run of the picture and attracted widespread attention.

C. C. Deardourff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, backed up this feat with a vigorous press campaign, thereby exploiting the engagement effectively.

Window display in which two children played with toys advertising "New Toys" (First Nat'l) at the Garden theatre, Battle Creek, Mich.

Rag Patch Contests Boosts "Rag Man" in Lima

When "The Rag Man" played recently at the Lyric theatre in Lima, Ohio, C. C. Deardourff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, drew attention effectively to the showing by running a rag patch contest in the leading newspaper, the Lima Daily News. A large mat was used for the contest and five days' co-operation for the News was achieved by this tie-up. The contest proved exceptionally popular.

Several window displays featuring Jackie Coogan caps and suits helped exploit the showing also, and there was a special lobby display.

Printed Balloons Exploit "Rag Man" Showing

Two thousand balloons printed with a cut of Jackie Coogan and an announcement of the showing of "The Rag Man" at the Rivoli theatre in Elyria, O., were recently distributed by C. C. Deardourff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, among the smaller children of the schools of the city. These balloons were carried by the children into all parts of the city and exploited the showing effectively.

This feat was backed up by advertising in the press and there was, in addition, a special lobby display.

Illuminated Cut-Outs Aid Flash on "The Lady"

An illuminated cut-out display in lamps was used over the marquee of the Strand theatre, Seattle, for "The Lady." Under the marquee was another cut-out in parchment paper, carrying the name of the star.

Effective use was made of the posters for "The Lady," eight pictures of the star being used on the theatre front. A large cut-out head was used above a specially decorated card carrying the name of the star and the picture in front of the ticket booth.

Cadets on street Exploit "Classmates" Showing

Two fine looking boys, dressed as West Point Cadets, were recently stationed outside the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, during the run of "Classmates," their smart appearance creating a world of attention and favorable comment for Manager H. B. Stiff.

The regular newspaper and billing campaign was started three weeks in advance with the distribution of ten 24 sheets. Two splendid window displays were also secured on the attraction.

Shadow-box arrangement used by Manager Harry Jones of the Milwaukee theater, Milwaukee, Wis. for "Up the Ladder" (Universal) during the showing.

COMMUNITY SERVICE

THE theatre fraternity of Atlanta stepped into the limelight last week by making the largest individual contribution yet tendered to the Firemen's Relief fund—a fund being raised by voluntary subscription to go to the widows and orphans of six Atlanta firemen who lost their lives in a disastrous fire that three weeks ago swept a section of Atlanta and threatened lives and property of thousands.

Every theatre manager in Atlanta co-operated in the movement which resulted in adding $3000 to the relief fund. The amount was raised by a mammoth midnight show staged at the city auditorium at half past ten o'clock Friday night. The hour was such that it did not break into the regular shows at the theatres, and drew hundreds who earlier in the week had attended some one of the theatres furnishing talent for the big benefit performance.

Immediately following the tragic fire that cost the lives of six members of Atlanta's fire department, leading citizens and prominent organizations have devoted themselves to raising a relief fund of not less than $20,000 for the families left destitute. Of this amount a little less than $17,000 was reported before the brilliant benefit performance brought the total to $20,000.

All three Atlanta dailies sponsored the raising of the fund and gave front page prominence to the midnight show staged by the theatre fraternity as their contribution to the cause. A group of men from the fire department was detailed to co-operate with theatre managers and tickets were sold in the lobbies following each performance.

Not only the picture theatres, but vaudeville and legitimate and tab houses co-operated in the undertaking. Every theatre using a screen carried a trailer announcing the benefit, placards were displayed in the lobby and at the box-office, tickets were on sale at each box-office as well, and various stores in town also co-operated in the sale of tickets.

So successful was the advance sale that two thousand tickets were disposed of before the box-office at the auditorium was opened the night of the performance. All tickets were "general admission"—price one dollar.

Effective atmospheric prologue put on by Manager Guy Kenimir at the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., during the showing of "The Spaniard" (Paramount).

The program was a really brilliant one, made up of the regular five acts of vaudeville at Loew's Grand, the five at Keith's Forsyth, a special act from the Howard (picture house) the orchestra from the Metropolitan theatre with Enrico Leide, conducting; the Howard orchestra with Alex Keese conducting; several local jazz orchestras, and with City Organist Charles Sheldeon opening the bill.

Manager Thomas H. James of Loew's Grand acted as General Chairman with Willard C. Patterson, manager of the Metropolitan as co-chairman; Manager Howard Price Kingsmore of the Howard headed the committee in charge of publicity and advertising.

The complete committee, representing the full managerial talent of Atlanta's theatre fraternity, as is follows: Thos. H. James, Loew's Grand; Willard C. Patterson, Metropolitan; Howard Price Kingsmore, Howard theatre; W. T. Murray, Rialto theatre; Lewis Haasse, Atlanta theatre (legitimate) Martin Semon, Forsyth theatre (Keith house); Thomas G. Coleman, Cameo; James F. Jackson, Tudor; Matt H. Whitham, Alamo No. 2; Sol Samuels, Alpha; W. E. Finch, Alamo No. 1; George Campbell, Bonita (tabloid); Alpha Fowler, PPalace (suburban).

IF you can get a cameraman, we know of no better business stimulator (and this is a pretty good time of year to put it over) than the making of a home talent motion picture. Done legitimately, with tie-ups with local merchants, clubs, schools and the like, it will have everyone in town talking. The expense is fairly heavy, of course, but split up among several merchants and organizations it is not prohibitive, and the exhibitor will be more than compensated for his share by the interest (and business) which will result. Get everyone in town into the picture, even if only in a mob scene, and they'll all turn out to see how they look "in the movies." Down in Chillicothe, in the southern part of Ohio, the Sherman theatre, operated by manager Johnson, has combined with the retail merchants to put over a stunt of this nature. Backed by the Chamber of Commerce, a four reel film is to be made. This film will include civic scenes, and activities of local interest. Also a short comedy will be made. "Fatty" David Southerd has been engaged to play the leading comedy role. All other roles will be portrayed by local talent. The stunt also includes a parade with floats by the retail merchants. Manager Johnson has agreed to run this picture on his screen the week following its completion.

COLLEGE AIDS EXPLOITATION

ONE of the special exploitation stunts recommended in connection with "Introduce Me," was used during the present run of the picture at the Criterion theatre, Los Angeles. This stunt was the formation of a chapter in the "Introduce Me" club, of which Anne Cornwall, who plays opposite the star in the picture, is president. The chapter was sponsored by the University of Southern California, and the complete outline of the working of the club was set forth in the college daily, "The Trojan." The daily said, in part:

"'I'm George Columbus. I'd like to have you meet me. And you are .....?' This is only a sample of the newest line to be popularized on the U. S. C. campus. It's made possible by the 'Introduce Me' Club, the latest organization.

"Membership in the club is not restricted to the campus, as the organization is for the whole city of Los Angeles. The chief requirements for membership are a sweet disposition, which includes a broad grin, and ability to make the best use of a strong right hand for the extensive handshaking which is a criterion of membership.

"The club buttons are much in evidence on the campus which shows that the Trojans are taking interest in this organization."

While over 20,000 of the "Introduce Me" Club cards and membership buttons were distributed during the Los Angeles run of the picture this is the first collegiate chapter of the club to be organized.

With colleges of the type of the University of Southern California taking up the idea of the "Introduce Me" club, it opens up unusual opportunities for exhibitors to tie-up with a similar plan in colleges and high schools.

AND OURS

An attractive prologue staged by M. P. Wetherell for the showing of "The Thief of Bagdad" (United Artists) at the Empress theatre, Kamloop, B. C.

NEW STYLE SHOW ANGLE

IT'S not always easy to find a new twist for the ever popular style revue, but Manager Robert W. Bender of the Columbia theatre, Seattle, found several for the one he put over with "Fifth Avenue Models" recently.

Bender tied up his show with one of Seattle's leading women's apparel shops, so that all costumes for the show were loaned for the occasion. But instead of using professional models, Bender secured the services of four of Seattle's foremost society debutantes, who were heavily advertised and featured as the models for the show. In order to make the stunt possible, the girls decided to donate their entire salary at the end of the week to various Seattle charities, which plan in itself was good for far more than the average newspaper publicity which would have been given had the Columbia used professional models.

For the show itself, Bender arranged a replica of a Yellow Cab at one side of the stage, and each girl made her appearance from the cab, as the door was opened by a uniformed attendant. They modeled the clothes during special musical numbers by the Columbia Concert orchestra, arranged by Director Francesco Longo, and retired at the other side of the stage. The revue was brought to a close by a vocal specialty sung by a popular Seattle soprano, and the screening of the feature followed as the lights were gradually lowered and the song number was carried throughout the film as the theme piece.

CO-OPERATION WINS

ALTHOUGH it was developed for use at Easter, the stunt recently employed by Joe Greene of the Lafayette theatre, St. Louis, should be good for a display at any time—and the cost is virtually nothing. It was worked in this way.

Greene wanted a special lobby display for his showing of "Fifth Avenue Models," and he thought that a nice floral display would be appropriate in view of the season. So he arranged with a nearby florist to arrange an attractive display in the lobby of the Lafayette, with a card on it crediting the work to the florist.

In addition—and this is the significant point—Green ran a typed radio-mat on his screen stating that the lobby display had been prepared by the florist in question.

In this way, Greene received without cost a lobby display worth around a hundred dollars, on top of which the florist reported that he had sold out every flower in the place as a result of the direct advertising.

EDUCATING PATRONS

IF patrons could be educated to shop for good pictures and good entertainment, rather than just a picture featuring So-and-So, many of the problems of this industry would be greatly simplified. There is a chance, now and then, through advertising to put in a little sales talk along this line. The Jackson Theatre News, published by the Jackson theatre at Jackson Heights, L. I., leads off a recent issue with an exscellent little editorial headed "Who Is In It?" which reads:

When the telephone rings at the Jackson and some one — who should be receiving the Jackson Theatre News but has failed to send their name in — asks, "What is the picture tonight?" A house attache (who should be attending to other business connected with the theatre) takes time to give the title of the picture, and the producer.

"Who is in it?" is the invariable comeback.

Now, it is impossible to read the entire cast over the phone, so the informant merely gives the name of the best known player.

If the party at the other end of the line likes the "star" they come to see the picture. If they don't, they stay away.

This is a poor standard by which to judge an entertainment.

A good picture is the result of a combination of the following: A good plot, artistic directing, competent acting and adequate settings and photography.

Perhaps the most important single item is the directing. For instance, the fact that James Cruze directed and produced "The Goose Hangs High" is far greater indication that the picture will be excellent than the fact that certain players appear in it.

It is certain that with Cruze directing, the acting and the settings will be all that can be desired. And since the plot is taken from the popular Broadway stage play, it is bound to be interesting.

If you want to choose your picture entertainment with care, the best plan is to have the Jackson Theatre News mailed to you every week, and read it thoroughly. In it you will find the complete programs, with illuminating notes on the pictures and other features of the programs, and you will be in a position to pick just exactly what you would like to see. Send your name and address to the manager, or leave a request with any house attache, and you will receive the News every week, free.

SHORT SUBJECT RECOGNITION

THE theatre program is one of the finest mediums of publicity which any theatre possesses but remains, in most cases just another of the publicity channels neglected so far as the Short Subject is concerned. One of the exceptions "Saxe-O-Grams" a program published by the Milwaukee theatre, Milwaukee, devotes most of a page to "Balto's Race to Nome" an Educational Film Exchange release. It contains an attractive pictorial layout with well written copy surrounding it.

Educational Signs Hamilton

Comedian Will Make Series of Six Comedies for Next Season's Program

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES has signed Lloyd Hamilton for a fourth series of six Hamilton comedies, the first of which will go into production at once. They will be released on the schedule for the coming season. The comedian will again have Dorothy Seastrom for his leading lady. She appeared with him in many of his successes of the past year.

This will be the sixth year in which Hamilton has participated in the Educational program. For two years he was a featured comedian in Mermaid comedies. Following this the Lloyd Hamilton Corporation was formed and Hamilton comedies starring Hamilton appeared on the program. Three of these series of six comedies have already been released.

During the season just closing Hamilton was starred in six two-reel Hamilton Comedies, "Jonah Jones," "Crushed," "Hooked," "Half a Hero," "King Cotton" and "Waiting." The last named is a July release. At the start of the season he was under the direction of Fred Hibbard, who died early in the year. Since then he has been directed by Stephen Roberts.

This season Hamilton will be directed by William Goodrich, one of the best of the comedy directors. Goodrich is responsible for many of the successful Tuxedo Comedies, notably "Dynamite Doggie," "The Iron Mule" and "Curses."

Production work will start at once on the new Hamilton series at the newly acquired Educational Studio, formerly the Principal Studios. The first of the series will appear on the Educational program as an early Fall release.

Century Establishes New Preview System

A new system under which all Century Comedies will be available for screening for exhibitors in all Universal exchanges months in advance of release has been inaugurated by Julius and Abe Stern, heads of the Century company.

The innovation places comedies on the same basis with features, as the Century product may be viewed by the exhibitors long before they are released for public presentation.

In discussing this innovation, H. M. Herbel, sales manager for Century, calls attention to the fact that since this plan was inaugurated several weeks ago, sales on Century Comedies for next season have shown a decided increase, both in volume and in price.

"We are finding out that the exhibitor is just as willing to preview a comedy as a feature, and that in the contracting for a season's output, he wants to know what he is getting. He does not want to buy a cat in a bag on his comedies any more than he wants to buy a block of features sight unseen.

"By unprecedented production activity this spring, and by close cooperation with the Universal laboratories, we have been able to get far ahead on our comedy schedule. We now have Century Comedies in the Universal exchanges as far ahead as the first of the year. In fact we have been that far ahead with sample prints for previewing for the past thirty days. And it is in this thirty days that we have noticed the increased booking most strikingly.

"I look for a big Comedy year. It's in the air. There must be something to it when you realize that many exhibitors actually are getting their short comedies lined up in advance of their feature bookings. We have numerous cases of this kind among our Century bookings. It shows a trend towards comedy. And exhibitors have a sixth sense. They seem to know in advance what is coming."

New Educational Line Up Not Yet Complete

THE program of Short Subjects outlined in the Sixth Annual Announcement of Educational Pictures for 1925-1926 running in this issue Motion Picture News does not necessarily represent a complete line-up of the subjects to be distributed next season through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., according to a statement by E. W. Hammons, President of Educational.

"Educational's Annual Announcements heretofore have not been issued until late summer," said Mr. Hammons, "but because of the very evident desire of exhibitors to line up their product early this year, it was deemed advisable for us to announce at this time all the series of pictures now definitely lined up. We have not yet had time to complete arrangements for two or three other groups of subjects which it is very probable we will distribute in the coming season. Detailed announcements of these aditional pictures will be made to exhibitors just as soon as it is possible."

Exploiting Short Subjects Is Box-Office Tonic

Actual Experience of Exhibitors Are Cited

By S. J. MAURICE,
Special Representative, Serial Dept., Universal

(Editor's Note.—This is the second of aseries of four articles by Mr. Maurice. The next will appear in an early issue).

WHEN I was down in Dallas several years ago as general press representative of the Southern Enterprises, a chain of more than one hundred theatres, I had an opportunity of proving the value of playing up short subjects in the advertising, of proving it not only to myself, but to the exhibitors as well. I always had the idea that good short stuff would draw on it's own account just as well as a good feature. Managers had been so prone to laying stress on the five reelers in the advertising and press matter, patrons would not have known there were to be one and two reelers on the program except that they knew it to be the custom. They just took the little fellows for granted and never knew in advance what they were to be.

Well, in Dallas I expounded my theory to Herschel Stuart, then director of theatres for the Southern Enterprises, and now managing director of the Missouri Theatre, in St. Louis, and incidentally one of the best house managers in the United States. He was interested immediately and said the idea sounded good to him and wondered why he had not thought of it before. He was about to play at his leading theatre a feature that had none too strong a punch despite an alluring title that promised a wallop. And he had a corking good two reeler, a Larry Semon comedy, which under ordinary circumstances would merely have been mentioned in the advertising in small type, if at all.

"We should play up the comedy on equal terms with the feature," I advised him. "Let's tell the public how good it is. Let them know in advance that there is double treat in store. They will think they are to get twice as much as usual for their money and won't be disappointed. The psychology of it is simple, in fact, fundamental!

And that is what we did. It worked like a charm. Never before had the Dallas people seen a short subject placed on an advertising equality with the longer picture. The novelty of the thing piqued curiosity and excited comment. The seed was planted in fertile soil and the harvest was all that could have been desired. Business jumped up twenty-five per cent and the patrons enjoyed that short subject twice as much as they would have if they had not gone to the theatre expecting to see it and it had been flashed upon them unawares. It has been that way too long—the short stuff looked upon as a mere filler—in or a side issue. The most gratifying part of the matter was, however, that the sale of that Semon comedy was stimulated among the exhibitors. Seeing it played up in Stuart's advertising immediately enhanced its value in their eyes. "If Herschel Stuart advertises it like that, it must be good," they argued, "so we will buy it and feature it too." They did so with the result that it did better business than any other two reeler of is calibre ever did before in that section of the country.

Policy Remains in Force

And, moreover, the policy thus inaugurated has been in force there ever since, though Mr. Stuart has gone to wider fields where he still maintains this policy which has proven so profitable. Only the other day Mr. Stuart advertised a short subject using as much space for it as he did for the bigger picture. Stuart knows short subjects as sure-fire drawing cards and dosen't hesitate to talk about them in his paid advertising.

But that was not the only experiment we tried successfully in Dallas. The Crystal Theatre in that city was not doing any too well, when the Southern Enterprises took it over and I suggested to Ol' Bill Saal, our booking manager that he book an entire program of short subjects at that house.

"Short Stuff House"

"Make it a short stuff house," was my advice. "Go after the shoppers and business men. Give them a quick, snappy, diversified show where people who are pressed for time can drop in for fifteen minutes, or half an hour and see variety and action. A lot of folks can't sit through a two hour program. If they cannot sit out a feature they would rather not start one. Make a feature of a featureless show."

The idea was radical, but Ol' Bill Saal saw there was much in its favor. So he tried it out. He put together a two reel western, a two reel comedy, a one reel review, a travelogue and a news-reel, we advertised it heavily and sold it for fifteen cents. The audiences came out saying it was the livest show they had seen in months and the Dallas papers declared that the new kind of motion picture program had come to stay and it had. If I remember correctly the Crystal is playing just such a program to this day. The house is filled and emptied each hour from eleven o'clock in the morning on, so that, at fifteen cents a head, it grosses more money that opposition houses that play a standard two hour bill with a feature at twenty cents.

Exploit the Shorts

Mr. Exhibitor, if you are going to buy short subjects why not exploit them? Why not tell the people what you've got. If they are good enough to buy and exhibit, if they are good enough to see, certainly they are good enough to advertise. Why waste so much good publicity material?. No successful merchant confines his advertising to the most expensive goods in his shop. He must sell his notions and his knick-knacks as well as his silks and satins if his business is going to prosper. And he advertises them all, often giving the greatest amount of space to the less expensive things.

Just how important your comedies and serials and travelogues and animated cartoons and news-reels are would be proved to you very quickly if you tried to get along without them. Just drop your short subjects for a week and try to get through on features alone and see where you would land. Well, if you can't get along without them, if the public must have them, why not try to extract every possible bit of showmanship value out of them?

And it is not only your short photo-plays —the comedies and westerns that deserve such attention. Often there is a shot in the news-reel that would fill your house for you if you let the people know you were going to show it. Time and again I have played up in the ads. a two minute flash from "current events" when it was something particularly timely or interesting and it proved as potent a drawing card as the feature.

The whole thing resolves itself down to this: make the most of the material in hand. Certainly you cannot neglect your features and their stars. You have paid big money for them and you expect them to bring the money back with interest. BUT, you also paid big money for the short stuff. It should also return dividends and it will, if only you give it the proper chance.

International News Shows U. S. Cavalry Stunts

International Newsreel No. 52 reveals some interesting and exclusive pictures of U. S. Cavalrymen in new and thrilling stunt riding. For the past two months Captain R. W. Sears, who, in addition to holding his commission in the Cavalry, is a staff cameraman for International Newsreel, has been at Fort Riley, Kansas, where the government conducts a Cavalry school under the supervision of Brig. Gen. Edward L. King, Commandant of the Post.

During his stay Captain Seers was given the opportunity of photographing for the first time the thrilling and perilous riding of America's fighting forces. The riders are shown going up and down rocky canyons, over story plateaus and in the various stunts which make up the program of the Post. The pictures, in addition to being shown in the leading theatres, will be made a part of the archives of the War Department.

"Husky" Hanes, Infant Star, Joins "Our Gang"

Hal Roach has added "Husky" Hanes, the infant actor who has won distinction in several recent Roach comedies, to the group of juvenile troupers who make up the "Our Gang" company. Henceforth, "Husky" will appear in all of the Gang comedies along with Mary Kornman, Jackie Condon, Mickey Daniels, Joe Cobb, Johnny Downs and Farina, all of whom are now regulars with their individual following of fans and admirers.

F. Richard Jones, director-general at the Hal Roach Studios, "discovered" the infant prodigy four or five months ago and "Husky" has played in two Glenn Tryon comedies and several other Roach fun-films. "Husky's" real name is Jack Hanes, Jr.

Franklyn Hanna Added to "Play Ball" Cast

Franklyn Hanna, cousin of the famed Ohio Senator, Mark Hanna, has been added to the cast of the new Pathe serial, "Play Ball," written by John J. McGraw and starring Allene Ray under the direction of Spencer Bennet.

Hanna is a veteran of both the speaking stage and the screen. His screen career dates back to the old Edison days when he played the villain role with Viola Dana in "The Cossack Whip." On the speaking stage he played Senator Murphy in "Potash and Perlmutter" both in New York and London.

The first chapter of "Play Ball," which was adapted for the screen by Frank Leon Smith, will be released on July 19.

"Chronicles" Film Feature of Boone Convention

Two of the "Chronicles of America" photoplays, produced by Yale University Press and distributed by Pathe, were presented as features of the entertainment program offered during the Boone Family Association convention held recently in Kentucky. "Daniel Boone" and "The Declaration of Independence" are the pictures which were screened for the 5,000 descendants of the famous Pathfinder who assembled from all parts of the country to honor Daniel Boone.

Pathe Announces July 25 List

"Stereoscopik" Reel One of Short Features on Diversified Program

THE next "Stereoscopik" reel to be offered by Pathe will be included on the program for the week of July 25, which is notable for the variety of subjects on the list announced this week by that company. "Ouch!" is the title of the "Stereoscopik" contribution to the program. It will be the third in the series produced by Ives-Leventhal, and presents a series of spectacular effects by means of third dimension photography.

In addition to this novelty reel there will be two Hal Roach comedies, an episode of "Sunken Silver," the current Pathe serial, an "Aesop's Film Fables," Pathe Review No. 27, a "Topics of the Day," and the regular issues of Pathe News.

"Isn't Life Terrible?" is the title of the Hal Roach two-reel comedy which presents Charley Chase in a series of vacation experiences that are right in season. Katherine Grant appears as Chase's charming wife. Baby Hardy is an invalid brother-in-law, and Lon Poff is another important member of the cast. Leo McCarey directed this one.

"Chasing the Chaser" is a one-reel comedy with Jimmie Finlayson as a husband who has never gone wrong but is constantly skidding. The plot concerns the efforts of a suspicious wife to keep track of her husband with the cooperation of a detective female impersonator. Stan Laurel is the director.

"The Secret Panel" is the latest chapter of the Patheserial "Sunken Silver" adapted from Albert Payson Terhune's story "Black Caesar's Clan." This is the ninth episode of the George B. Seitz production.

Pathe Review No. 27 brings a trio of entertaining and instructive subjects: "The Mists of Morning," views of Nature's blanket over a mountain lake; "St. Louis—The Mound City," another of the unique Pathecolor series on American cities; and "The Fossil Fields," another chapter of the "Origin of Man" series, being the picture-log of the Roy Chapman Andrews Expedition into Mongolia.

Educational Schedule Started

Christie Plant and the Educational Studio Units Begin Work for 1925-26 Program

THE producing units which are to supply comedies for the Educational schedule arranged for the 1925-26 season have started work on the extensive production program mapped out for them. The Christie Studios and the Educational plant in Hollywood are now in full swing on the new line-up.

In the huge new Educational Studio Lloyd Hamilton has commenced work on a recently contracted series of six Educational-Hamilton Comedies. Several Educational Mermaid Comedies have started in production. In the first, which Norman Taurog is shooting, the cast will include Lige Conley, Estelle Bradley, Jack Lloyd and Stan Blystone. The second company, directed by Stephen Roberts, is well under way with a cast headed by Al St. John and including Virginia Vance and Otto Fries.

William Goodrich handles the megaphone on the first Educational-Tuxedo Comedy to get under way. This comedy will present Johnny Arthur as a star. His supporting cast includes Helen Foster, Glen Cavender, George Davis and Joy Winthrop.

Other comedy units for the Educational program being housed in this studio, include the Lupino Lane, Cameo and Juvenile producing companies.

The Christie Studios have already launched production on their three series of star comedies, which will present Bobby Vernon, Walter Hiers and Jimmie Adams, and on the ten Christie Comedies with Neal Burns and Billy Dooley.

Walter Graham is directing the first Bobby Vernon Comedy from a story by Robert Hall. Frances Lee will support Vernon in this series.

The Walter Hiers unit is making its first picture under the direction of Archie Mayo. In the cast with Hiers is Evelyn Francisco, Jack Duffy, Bill Blaisdell and one of Mayo's child prodigy finds, Baby Brown. Duane Thompson and Clara Horton have also been signed and will play opposite Hiers in the new series.

The first of the pictures in which Jimmie Adams is raised to comedy stardom will be directed by Harold Beaudine. Molly Malone has been signed as leading lady, and Eddie Baker and Lincoln Plumer for prominent parts in the casts of the new Adams star series.

William Watson, a newly signed director, starts direction at once with the first Christie Comedy unit. Neal Burns will be featured, with the support of Vera Steadman, Natalie Joyce, Gale Henry and Bill Irving.

Preparations are also under way for the filming of a second Christie Comedy, featuring Billy Dooley.

Christie is rapidly assembling a squad of new beauties and comediennes for this series, and the 1925-26 program calls for the most intensive period of production which has yet been undertaken at this famous comedy plant.

Doris Anderson Joins F. B. O. Scenario Staff

F. B. O. has signed Doris Anderson to the scenario staff, where she will assist Fred Myton, scenario editor. Her first assignment will be the continuities for the new two-reel series starring Alberta Vaughn and Larry Kent, titled "The Adventures of Maisie." Miss Anderson is well known as a continuity and title writer and she has also written some successful sketches for the stage.

Famous Painter to Appear in Fox "Varieties" Reel

"With Pencil, Brush and Chisel" will be the title of a Fox "Varieties" reel which is to be produced in the New York studio of Emil Fuchs, one of America's leading artists and illustrators. The pictures will be based on the articles of the same title which were written by Fuchs and published in Saturday Evening Post. The scenes will show the artist at work as a painter, sculptor and finally as an etcher, creating a work called "A Modern Juno."

Other "Varieties" subjects in preparation deal with life along the Nile; points of interest in Cuba; and scenes taken in Australia.

Dooley to Use Sailor Make Up in Christie Comedies

Billy Dooley, vaudeville actor who played the big circuits in a sketch called "The Misfit Sailor," is to appear on the screen in his sailor characterization, it has been announced by Al Christie, who has signed the comedian to play featured roles in pictures for the Educational program.

Scott Darling to Supervise Universal Comedies

Scott Darling, author of popular screen stories, has been appointed as supervisor of comedy units at Universal City. Darling will have charge of the companies which will film fifty-two comedies for Universal next season.

"Don't" is the title of a new Rupert Hughes story filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The scenes above are taken from the picture.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

Chasing the Chaser
(Pathe—One Reel)

JIMMY FINLAYSON is featured as a would-be lady killer in this single reeler from the Roach studios. The action is concerned with the efforts of a detective retained by the wife to catch her husband "with the goods, blonde or brunette." The detective is a female impersonator, and passing himself off as the new maid, succeeds in having the arrant husband display his talents as a wooer as the wife looks on from behind a curtain.

The acting honors go to the chap, unnamed in the cast, who does the female impersonation. It is a larger part than any of the others, and, it seems to us, the performer overshadows the other members of the company. Possibly, it is one of the most skillful female impersonations we have ever seen on the screen.

"Chasing the Chaser" strains for effects, which, even if achieved with the greatest facility, could not be much better than mediocre. The material is a much coarser fibre than that usualy employed in comedies from the Roach studios, which now and then fail to be funny but seldom fail to show better taste than is evident in the general tone and make-up of this film.—T. C. KENNEDY.

Beauty and the Bandit
(Universal-Mustang—Two Reels)

THERE'S a pleasing story about this western which features George Larkin. It is not a new one by any means but it is well directed and has many exciting incidents and considerable suspense. The tale reveals a government geologist and his niece Madge, seeking a precious mineral. They encounter Jerry Burke of the Northwest Mounted Police who is on the trail of "The Snake," wanted for jailbreaking.

"The Snake" is revealed as the long missing brother of Madge, who when captured by Jerry is left under the guard of Madge. She promptly releases him and he makes his getaway. Later the "Snake" saves Jerry from death and reveals the true culprit, for whose crime Madge's brother was wrongfully imprisoned. The usual happy ending follows. This one is well above the average for the two-reel western.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Bobby Bumps & Company
(Educational—One Reel)

THIS Earl Hurd picture of the animated cartoon series is much the same as the others that have gone before. The cartoons show the various numbers on a vaudeville program. They are well done and quite humorous in spots. On this program Bobby Bumps & Company go through some humorous antics, as do the great magician and the swan dancer. This provides fair entertainment as a program filler.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Isn't Life Terrible?
(Pathe—Two Reels)

WHILE this is not up to the best which Charley Chase has done since starting his series with Hal Roach, the picture is a step or so ahead of the average two-reeler in general quality and several jumps ahead in point of originality. Chase and his director, Leo McCarey are keeping up their good work of aiming just a little higher than any of their competitors and they are scoring with as much consistency as can be expected. They introduce a little satire here and there and just a modicum of subtlety now and then, but they never seem to forget that the public likes action and broad treatment, even obviousness, in its screen comedies. In a word, like all of the screen artists who have gone to the top, they are artists just as far as good showmanship will permit.

"Isn't Life Terrible?" is a timely play about a family man who must take the wife and kiddie on a vacation. There is no money, so he enters a fountain-pen selling contest to win a free trip across the sea. He is declared one of the winners and the trip is made on an antiquated bark having brittle life boats, life-belts which sink immediately, and which develops leaks at the slightest provocation. There is some good action concerning the child, which gets lost, and a brother-in-law who tags along. The latter is a thorough pest and the spectator can cheer with our hero when the ship's carpenter tells him that the brother-in-law broke his leg climbing up the rigging and had to be shot.

Katherine Grant is pleasing as the wife, and Bebe Hardy and Lon Poff do good work in support. "Isn't Life Terrible?" is not a side-splitting comedy, but it is never dull, and that, in view of the rather lean supply of good comedies on the current market, makes it good enough for the best of programs.—T. C. KENNEDY.

Married Neighbors
(Universal-Century—Two Reels)

BILLY ENGLE and Beth Darlington are featured in this two-reel Century, which tells a lively but not unusual story. It is of the oft-repeated tale of the bachelor's last party before he takes the marriage vow. With some of his young married neighbors he goes on a wild tear that ends when they take possession of a hansom cab.

The usual incidents mark the cab ride when the horse refuses to go any further. Some of the party are hitched to the shafts, while others assume undignified attitudes within the cab. It ends when the cab goes over a bridge and Billy falls into the seat of Beth's auto. He is eventually forgiven and the marriage ceremony is proceeded with. It's just a fair comedy whose stunts have been many times repeated, but which nevertheless are still good for some laughs.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Below Zero
(Educational-Mermaid—Two Reels)

LIGE CONLEY has a vehicle well above the average in this comedy, which in spots is real comedy and which too has a fairly good story. It is a tale of the North woods with real snow scenes and Lige as a pinch hitter in the Northwest mounted police.

Lige craves adventure and is sent by his father to his friend, the head of the Northwest mounted police to be cured. He is given the detail to bring in the hardest character in the district. He succeeds after some thrilling adventures, in which he is first foiled by the outlaw, chased by a bear and subjected to numerous hardships. His negro valet also shares in all the action with him and provides a good share of the fun. There is a lot of good hokum in this one and it should go well where they like the short comedy.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Pathe Review No. 25
(One Reel)

THE so-called "process-camera" has been used to make an interesting subject to bring this issue of the Review to a close. The pictures are of an expert gymnast, and by the use of duplicate images, stop motion, slow and normal motion used for contrast, the article proves highly entertaining and somewhat astonishing. There is an industrial feature showing the manufacture of pins. This is interesting and will afford your patrons the opportunity to go forth and talk quite authoritatively about how the little pins are made from long strands of wire, and so-forth and et cetera. The scenic contribution presents views of an ancient French town on the Loire.—T. C. KENNEDY.

Plenty of Nerve
(Universal-Century—One Reel)

EDNA MARIAN has a pretty good vehicle in this one to display her comedy talents. She is well supported by a good company and a passable story. Superstition plays an important part in furnishing the comedy. Edna is wooed by an extremely superstitious sheik, who has the misfortune to have a black cat cross his path on Friday the 13th, the day he proposes to and is accepted by Edna.

One misfortune after another befalls him and he becomes further involved when Edna's mother inherits an insane asylum. Edna and mother go to take possession of the place, but the wily manager plunges them into a padded cell, from which the lover uses every ruse to extricate them. With the aid of a kicking mule he finally accomplishes his purpose. There is some fast action in this one and some comedy situations that should be good for many laughs.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Strangler Lewis vs. Wayne Munn
(Educational—Two Reels)

THESE are the official motion pictures of the recent world's heavyweight championship match in which Lewis defeated Munn in two out of three falls. Wrestling pictures are somewhat of a novelty and perhaps no better ones were ever shown on the screen than these. After showing the regular action in the three falls the pictures are slowed up and every detail of the holds is clearly shown. There are some exceptionally good shots showing the intricate holds of this strenuous sport.

The picture shows not only the action in the bout, but both of the big fellows going through their training stunts, the crowds gathering for the bout at Michigan City and the numerous other details of a sporting championship event. Every shot is clear and the picture should be interesting to every follower of sport.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Heart Trouble
(Universal-Bulls Eye—One Reel)

THIS is one of the Sweet Sixteen series featuring Arthur Lake and Marceline Day. It is a better vehicle than some of the other late ones. The action is laid around a masquerade party given by Marceline, from which Arthur is banned by her parents because he has just broken an expensive vase.

The two youngsters plan a disguise which gives him entre, but it is discovered by Eddie, the rival. Eddie, disguised as a sheriff handcuffs Arthur to the girl Eddie is trying to get rid of, but her caveman sweetheart halts the plot by handcuffing Eddie and Arthur together. Arthur is eventually ejected by Marceline's parents and takes Eddie along with him. They are released from their shackles only after they have spent the night in the same bed. There is some fairly good comedy mixed up with this tale.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Mexican Melody" Title for Hodge-Podge

"Mexican Melody" has been selected as the title of the Lyman H. Hodge-Podge to be released on the Educational program, during the week starting June 14.

Grounds for Divorce

(Paramount—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

THIS is the tale of a young wife whose husband, a prominent divorce lawyer, neglects her to defend wives whose "meal tickets" neglect them. He even forgets his first wedding anniversary in his zeal to win a divorce for an actress, who uses all her powers to grab off the lawyer for her own which action, of course, is objected to by the wife and there is a separation. The wife weds again, but lo, and behold, soon engages her former husband to get her a divorce from her latest spouse. In the end we find the couple reunited.

We have usually thought that Florence Vidor could save most any picture, but in this instance, her efforts to pull through an uninteresting series of sequences, have been unsuccessful. It is a vehicle unworthy of her talent. But at that her work stands out head and shoulders above all the other characterizations. Matt Moore does not look the part of a Parisian lawyer, nor does Harry Myers convince as a French count. Louise Fazenda is satisfactory in the role of Marianne, the actress, and gets a few laughs with her work. George Beranger, who did a novel bit as the movie star in "Are Parents People?" has another bit o' foolishness here—that of an aviator who is continually pursuing the heroine.

There are a few "moments" in the action, the first coming when the wife, inviting friends in to celebrate their first wedding anniversary, finds her husband overlooking the anniversary as he listens to the actress' new evidence. The wife hurls an inkwell at friend husband and departs. There is some comedy in the sequence in which the aviator takes up Myers in the role of the count and after a series of loop the loops forces him to sign a note releasing his wife. There is much padding in the picture which is decidedly too long and which lacks suspense. Miss Vidor wears some stunning gowns and, of course, is very attractive. The picture is well mounted but will probably go better in foreign climes.

THEME. A comedy drama of marital mixups laid against a Parisian background.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The trial scene in which Louise Fazenda injects some comedy. The sequence in which the wife leaves her husband who is devoting his time to the actress on his own wedding anniversary.

DIRECTION. Paul Bern has done much better things than this, but he has been handicapped here with weak material. Has injected some comedy and a few thrills in the airplane sequence.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Sell Florence Vidor. She is your best bet here. Radio theme may be used to advantage with photo of Harry Myers and his wireless apparatus. Use title in teaser ads week in advance.

DRAWING POWER. Popularity of Miss Vidor may pull this one over in some houses with exploitation. O. K. for community houses and the towns.

SUMMARY. A comedy drama with a foreign locale, which is not especially popular with American audiences but which will probably go big in other lands. Florence Vidor is the saving grace and your best bet when selling the picture to your public. The comedy injected by Miss Fazenda may also help put it over.

Maurice Sorbier ..... Matt Moore
Count Zapata ..... Harry Myers

The Count signs, but Sorbier, summoned to aid Alice divorce Zapata, dashes away with Alice himself and remarries her.

Everyman's Wife

(Fox—4365 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A LIKELY little yarn has been fashioned into a pleasing picture. It unfolds a plot which will be appreciated as running pretty close to life—in that it features a domestic quarrel started by a jealous wife who allows petty worries to make her suspicious. We cannot remember of having seen such a story revolving around insignificant trifles. Usually the husband and wife have their misunderstanding around some ardent rival—whose cards are placed face-up on the table. Here the entire plot hinges upon the jealousy of the bride—who allows her suspicions to be fed by the fires of circumstantial evidence.

The whole trouble starts over a cat. The husband disagrees with his wife over this feline animal—and soon after the disappearance of their pet he chases a cat next door—and the attractive neighbor comes into the plot by telling him it belongs to her. This manner of precipitating the quarrel will run pretty close to home in more than one family. And the little tidbits of incident have a ring of truth about them that makes the story enjoyable.

It is when the latter scenes develop the climax that the picture loses some of its spontaneity and logic. Had they been treated in the same way as the early episodes the story would have been flawless. But the business of the wife framing a scene in which she invites her married rival and tries to prove her husband false is overstressed. It dosen't hold up as logical—even though it offers a surprise twist when the other woman's husband makes love to her, mistaking her for the jealous heroine. Of course a reconciliation is effected when the wife admits her suspicions have no foundation.

The picture contains enough of the human incident to carry it by with most any type of patron. It is acted in realistic fashion by Elaine Hammerstein, Herbert Rawlinson, Robert Cain and Dorothy Phillips. It is pleasingly mounted and the footage is just the right length to sustain it.

THEME. Domestic drama involving quarrel of couple over mere trifles—the wife being unduly suspicious. In generously admitting her foolish suspicions, they are reconciled.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The human touches. The life-like characterizations. Scene when wife starts her strategy to prove her husband false. Scene of other man making love in the dark—to his own wife.

DIRECTION. Has kept it logical most of the way. Has seasoned it with some accurate touches of life. Gets result from players. Errs only in stressing climax—which hardly registers as real.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Certainly affords teaser possibilities in title—which can be exploited in many ways—tie-ups with stores, etc. Might interest young married couples—giving special matinees. Might provoke interest with copy written around easy habit of married couples to jump at conclusions.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for the average trade. A good bet for neighborhood houses. Should interest adults in most any locality.

SUMMARY. The first part of this picture runs pretty true to life—the scenes being balanced with lifelike touches of domestic strife. It is pretty well acted, too. The human highlights keep it interesting.

THE CAST

Mrs. Randolph ..... Elaine Hammerstein
Mr. Randolph ..... Herbert Rawlinson
Mr. Bradin ..... Robert Cain
Emily ..... Diana Miller
Mrs. Bradin ..... Dorothy Phillips

By Ethel Hill and Enid Hibbard. Scenario by Lillie Hayward. Directed by Maurice Elvey.

SYNOPSIS. Young bride allows herself to become unduly suspicious of her husband. The smallest trifles worry her into fits of jealousy. In chasing the cat the husband meets the woman next door—and the acquaintance ripens into friendship. The jealous bride stages a party to prove her husband false. After realizing his innocence she confesses her foolish suspicions and reconciliation follows.

A Man of Iron

(Chadwick—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S a good characterization here for Lionel Barrymore. It permits him to enact one of those strong, silent men roles. No actor is better equipped to do this than the Chadwick star. He lends a rugged quality to his portrayal which is perfectly in key with the plot. This particularly self-made man (true to type) appreciates his failure as a lover. That's why he has never married—that's why he becomes frightened when placed in the company of the fair sex. He is all wrapped up in business—the business being the management of an iron foundry. The plot gets under way by introducing the "iron man's" sister endeavoring to act as a marriage broker. She would like to see him wedded to the aristocratic Bowdoin girl.

As there must be conflict in this type of story the hero has a rival in a titled foreigner who is a fortune hunter. The latter is a spineless, weak-willed character who fascinates the women with his grace and romantic ardor. It strikes us that the masculine figures are much better drawn—much better contrasted than those of the opposite sex. There isn't enough individuality among the feminine characters. The prince, learning the heroine's mother has become financially embarrassed, transfers his affections to a title-hunting heiress—and she leads him into matrimony before he can change his mind.

This incident is mostly visualized at a reception given by the Bowdoins. The "man of iron" marries the girl of his heart who feels no affection for her husband. But he wins respect for aiding her mother to recoup her fortune without the daughter being advised of his generosity—and he wins sympathy for meeting with failure in romance after waiting so many years for domestic happiness. He draws within himself—and allows his wife to find contentment in her own way. Naturally she becomes interested in him because of his indifference.

After a European journey in which the prince renews his pursuit of her the husband takes a hand, punishes the interloper, and becomes reconciled to his wife. The climax has dramatic tension since it features a duel. Had the plot been treated more compactly—with less movement by the characters in making entrances and exist it would have been more spontaneous and sustaining.

THEME. Domestic drama of self-made man of wealth who makes a failure of marriage but whose strength of character arouses wife's love and respect.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Lionel Barrymore's performance. The reception. The settings and atmosphere. The manner in which husband and wife drift apart.

DIRECTION. Brings out good characterization and shows results in manner masculine figures are contrasted. Might have shown less movement by characters and held some of the feminine players in check as a few of them overact.. Builds plot convincingly.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Use the campaign book for angles on exploitation. Feature Barrymore. Play up the loveless marriage with a teaser campaign showing how husband can win his wife if he steels himself in matters of love as he does with business problems.

DRAWING POWER. For average houses, neighborhoods, community theatres and small towns. Star is well known and talented enough to draw them. Title has appeal.

SUMMARY. Here is a domestic drama which carries a lot of sound characterization and which points a deal of truth. It is well told in the manner in which the central figures are established, though the plot could have been more compact.

THE CAST

Philip Durban.....Lionel Barrymore
Claire Bowdoin.....Mildred Harris
Martha Durban.....Winifred Barry
Mrs. Edith Bowdoin.....Dorothy Kingdon
Hugh Bowdoin.....Alfred Mack
Denis Callahan.....J. Moy Bennett
Maybelle Callahan.....Isobel DeLeon
Prince Novakian.....Jean Del Val

Scenario by Lawrence Marston. Directed by Whitman Bennett.

SYNOPSIS. Self-made man manufacturer approaches middle-age without romance. Longs to meet right girl, but realizes his failure as as a lover. Marries society girl and aids her mother to recover financial losses. The wife drifts away from him and he permits her the freedom of her pre-marital life. A European prince disappointed in his own romance, seeks an affair with her, but the husband renewing interest in his wife, punishes the interloper. Reconciliation follows.

Shattered Lives

(Gotham Production-Lumas—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

AIDED by a cast of well known players, Henry McCarty has turned out a fair program picture in this offering from the independent field. While the plot is rather hackneyed, it possesses some novel angles and a few thrills, while the human interest stuff is spread on thick here and there. As the title infers the theme deals with lives shattered by fate.

Many years before the tale opens "Mumsie" Trent's husband had left her, taking with him their baby son. The husband had figured in a railroad wreck, escaping uninjured but losing the child who had been rescued by a conductor. After several years, this child had been adopted by "Mumsie," who did not know it was her real son. This fact was not known by Spencer Foulkes and "Red" Myers who plan to introduce "Red" as the long missing son and supplant Donald, the adopted son. They succeed in doing this and also in kidnaping John Trent, the father, who has returned from Alaska with much coin of the realm. However, Donald, leaving home bitterly disappointed with this new turn in his life, teams up with "Chick" Connors and the two aid in a thrilling rescue of Trent, Sr., from the gang of crooks.

This rescue is one of the thrills of the picture and another comes in the suspense-packed race between the car in which father and son are speeding to the old homestead and the auto bearing a half dozen underworld characters. The crooks overtake the fleeing car, but they are not prepared for the occupants—a few detectives who have been picked up at a garage. All is cleared up when Trent reaches home where he is welcomed once more by "Mumsie" and "Red" is identified as a crook.

Ethel Wales is convincing as well as appealing as "Mumsie," while Edith Roberts is a very acceptable heroine. Robert Gordon has the principal male role and does well in it. The heavy roles are well taken care of by Eddie Phillips and Bernard Randall. The picture is fairly well mounted although the plot does not call for any elaborate sets.

THEME. Melodrama in which a family is reunited after the plot of a gang of crooks to grab the father's fortune and split the family by introducing a bogus son is foiled.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The introduction of "Red" as the son in "Mumsie's" home. The scene in which "Mumsie" informs her adopted son that she is not his mother. The kidnaping of the father. The rescue by Donald and "Chick." The auto chase.

DIRECTION. A fair bit of megaphone work. Has kept the action moving along smoothly. Has introduced a good climax and a few thrills. Has brought out some good acting. Has given the picture a fair mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the name of Edith Roberts. Tell the folks that this is a clean "meller" of the old fashioned type good for the whole family. Emphasize the auto chase. Might advertise it as a story of mother love.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for the smaller downtown houses, some community theatres and the towns.

SUMMARY. There is nothing in this one that lifts it out of a well-beaten path, but the acting is good and the cast is made up of a few talented players, notably Robert Gordon and Edith Roberts. There are some thrills and the climax packs a punch. There is an adequate mounting.

THE CAST

Donald Trent.....Robert Gordon
Sally Barker.....Edith Roberts
"Mumsie" Trent.....Edith Wales
"Red" Myers.....Eddie Phillips
Enos Dayton.....Charles W. Mack
Spencer Foulkes.....Bernard Randall
John Trent.....Willis Marks
"Chick" Connors.....Newton House

By Victor Gibson. Adapted and directed by Henry McCarty. Photographed by Jack Mackenzie.

SYNOPSIS. "Mumsie" Trent is living alone on a farm with Donald Trent, who has reached maturity not knowing that he was adopted by "Mumsie," after her husband had taken her real son 20 years before and decamped. John Trent went to Alaska. He made a fortune. The son had been saved from a railroad wreck and after three years had been adopted by "Mumsie," who did not know he was her real son. This is all developed after a shyster lawyer plants "Red" Myers in the Trent home as the "real" son and kidnaps John Trent, hoping to get his fortune through plot, which fails. Donald is reunited with his parents and weds Sally Barker, his sweetheart.

Smooth as Satin

(Gothic-F. B. O.—6003 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A VERY thrilling crook melodrama has been put across by F. B. O.—one which tells its action with good logic—and which moves vigorously from the opening scene through the climax. Its the most convincing crook story we've seen in a dog's age since the redemption theme isn't lugged in by the heels to influence the characters to walk the straight and narrow. They mend their ways when they realize how low one of their ilk can descend in the scale of society when losing his grip on himself. That's one logical touch—and rings with more conviction than if the crooks found redemption through romance.

Bayard Veiller's story contains plenty of human highlights which have been appreciated by Ralph Ince, the director. The latter has sensed the fact that the tension of the melodramatic episodes must be balanced with humor. This element, neatly dovetailed, acts as a safety valve. There are other factors, too, which make this a quality melodrama. You are given considerable surprise in wondering just how the crooks will extricate themselves. And this suspense is just as keen as when it follows some tense episode.

The manner in which the crooks are introduced offers novelty. The feminine Raffles is doubling as a maid in a wealthy dowager's home when she surprises a second-story man. He gives himself up to save her, and out of gratitude she aids him in escaping from prison with a high-speed roadster, rented for the occasion. They might have shown how he made his exit. The pursuit by the guards and a determined detective is fraught with suspense and humor. The crooks find refuge in a farmhouse and are married off by a hick justice who thinks them elopers. Eventually they set up housekeeping and are fleeced by an older pair of crooks. Here is some first rate stuff—entirely new—and paves the way for a particularly thrilling climax when the train carrying the husband back to Sing Sing is wrecked by a cavein while passing through the tunnel. A graphic scene, that—and which brings a fitting conclusion to a compact melodrama. The detective is rescued from the debris and the crooks are given their liberty.

Evelyn Brent makes a charming "bandit" and acts the role with fine intelligence. Bruce Gordon, as her co-worker in crime, acts convincingly. The supporting cast is excellent. Its a corking good melodrama anyway you look at it.

THEME. Crook melodrama of fair thief who surprising second-story man falls in love with him. They are accidentally married and decide to go straight, though hounded by the law on several occasions.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The surprise incident. The constant suspense. The fine characterizations by Miss Brent and Mr. Gordon. Scene of marriage. Scene when couple are outwitted by older crooks. The train wreck. The humor and pathos. The titles.

DIRECTION. Has brought forth a well-balanced crook melodrama, keeping it at an even pace and enlivening it with tense action. Dovetails it with human touches and keeps it in perfect key with theme. A creditable mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. You can tell them that this is a different crook story—one which offers suspensive action, realities, humanities, humor and pathos. Play up Evelyn Brent—and exploit the title.

DRAWING POWER. Good enough for first runs or any type of house. It should appeal in any locality.

SUMMARY. This picture has the stuff which appeals, neatly balanced as it is with all the dramatic elements. Has thrills in abundance—the climax being a wow—and very clever characterizations. The incident, the surprises and the suspense keep one attentive throughout. Excellently acted. A corking good melodrama.

The Light of Western Stars

(Paramount—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WILLIAM K. HOWARD, one of the most experienced directors of westerns—and who was responsible for "The Thundering Herd"—has fashioned a fairly exciting melodrama from Zane Grey's story of a waster's redemption and the carryings-on of a gang of outlaws. In order to build up a convincing atmosphere he has over-stressed several scenes and holds many of them far too long. Thus the suspense loses its punch when it is needed the most. But it is no 'hit or miss' direction. He doesn't permit the characters to jump about at breakneck speed, but gives them sufficient time to be natural.

Grey's story is no different from dozens of others which have been turned into celluloid drama. He has merely shaken up a few ingredients—and Howard has brought them forth against a rich array of backgrounds. The three players who did so much for "Wanderer of the Wasteland" are well cast here. Jack Holt, enacting the waster, compels the fair visitor from the East to marry him before you can say "Broncho Billy." Being intoxicated at the time he suffers remorse afterward. The girl, played with considerable charm if not much feeling by Billie Dove, realizing that he has a spark of manhood effects his regeneration by declaring her faith in him. Where does Noah Beery figure? Well, he is the leader of the bandits—and gets the girl's fugitive brother (who had killed one of his men) the girl, herself, and the hero in his clutches—and then proceeds to torment them.

The story doesn't hold up in the manner in which the villain allows the trio to discuss their plans for escape. The brother is delegated to collect a ransom, yet he is permitted to talk things over with the other prisoners in the presence of their captor. The latter is sure of himself, but oh, how Beery colors the role! He steals the picture with as picturesque a study of a western bad man as we've seen in a half-dozen years. Just when it looks black for the hero who has taken his "walk of death" in the courtyard, the rescuers arrive and save them.

Howard makes the villains meet death with plenty of abandon They are brave men even if they are bad ones. They stand for a brief moment—then topple over. The scenery helps sustain the story—which while conventional manages to carry a full line of melodramatic highlights. Certainly the gunplay is active enough.

THEME. Western melodrama of a waster who is redeemed by girl who comes into his life. He willingly sacrifices himself for her, but is saved by rescuers.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Noah Beery's characterization. The scene when villain has captives in his power. The final climax when they are rescued.

DIRECTION. Surely makes characters convincing by holding scenes long enough to permit them to get everything out of them. Might have quickened up the climaxes —and brought more conviction to episode where characters discuss their rescue. Gives it excellent mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Another Zane Grey story. Make tie-ups with book-dealers. Author has a following—so play his name prominently. Also play up Noah Beery, Jack Holt and Billie Dove.

DRAWING POWER. Should go well in houses catering to westerns. Lovers of outdoor dramas will respond to it. Suitable for any type of house.

SUMMARY. While carrying an obvious story which builds to its conventional finish, the picture has a lot of good stuff in it. The scenes are shaped to get everything possible from them, although some of them are held too long—so that the action loses its pace. Affords Beery with an excellent role. He gives a great performance.

THE CAST

Night Life of New York

(Allan Dwan-Paramount—Eight Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

THIS is the first of Paramount's "Golden Forty," and a real novelty it is. Edgar Selwyn has taken the things that really happen along the Gay White Way and woven them into an entertaining tale which Allan Dwan has transplanted to the screen in a vivid and colorful manner. Never has Broadway and its night life been more thoroughly "shot" by the cameraman. The night clubs, the after theatre crowds, the jazz parties, the hotel life, yes, even one of those fashionable robberies of a bejeweled Broadway dowager as she returns from an all-night round of the clubs with her escort, a taxi chase, Follies gold diggers—all these phases of metropolitan existence and more—have been placed on the silver sheet in a fast-moving manner.

There are some remarkably fine shots of New York and its famous "sights," especially Broadway at night and then the audience is taken on a tour of the new Gotham institutions—the night clubs with much of the important action taking place in Texas Guinan's El Fey club with Texas herself on the job as hostess. These night club scenes are packed with jazz. There is also much action in the Hotel Commodore and it is here that Rod LaRocque as the wild lad from Clay City, Iowa, meets his future wife, the telephone girl, played exquisitely by Dorothy Gish.

The plot has to do with the decision of a wealthy Iowan to send his son to New York and get him into so much trouble that he'll be glad to come home and settle down. The dad plots with his New York manager but the plan is not needed for the son gets into some real trouble and lots of it when he becomes mixed up in a hold-up. Rod La Rocque is a good selection for the role of the son. Miss Gish is immense as his switchboard operator sweetheart. Helen Lee Worthing, of course, is the Follies girl to a capital T, while Ernest Torrence comes into his own in a comedy role, that of John Bentley, New York hater. George Hackathorne and Arthur Housman do well in their roles of hold-up men. The picture is lavishly staged and should be a box office picture because of its real novelty.

THEME.—A dramatic comedy romance of life along Broadway in which a western cut-up is cured of his desire to paint things red and returns to Iowa with a telephone girl as his wife.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS.—The scenes of life in New York's famous night clubs. The night shots along Broadway. The views of Gotham's "sights." The sequence in which Ronald is forced to drive bandits to the scene of a hold up and then is arrested himself for the job. The capture of the crook. The acting of the entire cast.

DIRECTION. Allan Dwan knows Broadway and he has painted its life on the screen in realistic and entertaining manner. He has kept things pepped up from beginning to end and packed in a good quota of "sidelights." Has given the feature a rich mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The title is a good one. Plaster the town with it. Play up the names of the stars. Put on a prologue patterned after one of the Night Club scenes.

DRAWING POWER. O. K. for the large and small houses and especially fine for the towns where pictures of New York life always fascinate and arouse interest.

SUMMARY. A true picture of doings in the metropolis, excellently acted and lavishly mounted with some fine shots of Broadway and other parts of New York and a great sequence dealing with the new night clubs. A good story and lots of action, pretty girls and a fine cast to top it off.

THE CAST

The Sporting Chance

(Tiffany Production—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'RE off! When the horses break the tape for the Nassau Handicap and the Southern gentleman's fast stepper, Kentucky Boy, comes through a winner, thus clearing up his debts and saving his sweetheart's father from going to prison, there is added the high spot of this picture. The climax is the redeeming feature. It shows some first rate local color—a well photographed race, and a fair amount of suspense—which compensate for a stereotyped story that dosen't hang together very well.

There isn't much variety to the plot—even though there is a little surprise in the "about face" the Northern lover makes when he would compromise the heroine for refusing to marry him. It is planted that he is a man of wealth, but the point is somewhat hazy concerning the hero's debt to him. The owner of Kentucky Boy has renewed his friendship with the heroine upon his arrival in New York—and she gladly takes up her engagement with him. Yet when her father gets involved with financial losses the girl rejects him coldly and becomes engaged to the man of wealth. This plotting is too convenient to ring true—and it spoils the characterization.

There is one sequence which introduces a lavish party being given the heroine by the Northerner. Some of this action bears evidence of being padded, though it is necessary to lead up to the climax. The hero has gained admittance to find out why his rival ordered the sheriff to attach his horse. But while he is in the house his romantic worries are dissipated by the heroine's confession for treating him so coldly. While the minion of the law is guarding the stable door, the stable boys tear down the boards on the opposite side and take the horse to her home, hiding him upstairs in her boudoir. It is an easy matter to get the horse on the track by hitching him to an ice-cream wagon.

What follows is the race. The director has shot the real thing—and has evidently used a few cameras to capture close-ups. It is an obvious story, but it has its moments of interest. The players get fair results.

THEME. Melodrama of race-track revolving around Southerner who owns fast stepper. He is in debt to rival who has sheriff attach the horse. The girl—to save her father, consents to marry the Northerner. The Southerner wins the race and the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The horse-race. The color and atmosphere of the stables and track. Scene of party. Moment when hero saves heroine from being compromised. The acting by Dorothy Phillips and George Fawcett. Humor when horse is quartered in boudoir and is driven to track.

DIRECTION. Gets good incident and atmosphere from track episodes. Fails to make story logical all the way—and pads out some of the action. All in all obtains fair results.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up Dorothy Phillips' return to screen after a long absence. Mention Lou Tellegen and George Fawcett. Bill as a colorful melodrama of race-track.

DRAWING POWER. For average houses, neighborhood and community theatres. Also suitable for small towns. Cast might attract them.

SUMMARY. This is as obvious as any other race-track story, and plot doesn't hold up very well—the characters jumping at too many conclusions. Yet it contains some first rate incident and atmosphere—and a climax which is colorful.

THE CAST

Darrell Thornton	Lou Tellegen

The Making of O'Malley

(First National—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ALL the elements of hokum (the kind of hokum that appeals to the audience) have been woven together to make a heart interest picture. While much of the plot is preposterous still it contains sufficient sentiment, romance and action to hold the attention. The characterization is not so faulty. Milton Sills making his first appearance as a star has the role of a New York policeman. His acting is creditable even though he carries out the law in terms that you will have to stretch your imagination to accept.

Stories whose central characters are cops are invariably full of action and color. The hero's work is hazardous enough to fill a serial. This particular blue-coat is one of the most ruggedly honest men of the force. His duty guides him to help school-children across the street and to capture a desperate gang of bootleggers. His sense of square play leads him to help the stricken child of the man he railroaded to prison—and his sense of fairness to the girl he loves leads him to sacrifice his honor to protect the man engaged to her. With such sure-fire qualities indicating the kind of man the hero is, there can be no doubt of the sympathy and admiration extended him by the audience.

Where the story dosen't hold up is in presenting the heroine as a society girl who hobnobs around with a bootlegger—and in the manner in which the clouds are erased and the sunshine turned on for the happy ending. The cop has been humiliated by his captain before the girl. He is stripped of his shields and in leaving the house where he has permitted the heroine's fiance his freedom he his shot by the child's father, paroled from prison. Yet in the twinkling of an eye, the convict has no charge pressed against him, the shields are returned to the cop when the paroled man gives the name of the man higher up, and the heroine shows her affection for the officer.

The picture, nevertheless, has audience appeal—and Sills has a following. So this new venture of his will doubtless register at the box-office. It is well pieced together and directed with an eye upon the elemental emotions. Dorothy Mackaill has a vapid role as the society-schoolteacher. It is a thankless part at best, but she makes the most of it.

THEME. Heart interest drama of cop's adventures while patroling his beat. Has a romance, helps children in distress and sacrifices his honor to save the girl he loves from scandal.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Sills' convincing performance. The local color. The railroading of the crook. The incident. The capture of the bootleggers. The scene when officer is stripped of his shields. The pathos.

DIRECTION. Extracts all the elements to make this story tug at the emotions. Doesn't overdo the sentiment until the climax—then he piles it on too thick. Injects sure-fire hokum, keeps it moving and mounts it well.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tie up with police force. Dress up quartette as bluecoats to render vocal numbers. Exploit Milton Sills making first appearance as a star.

DRAWING POWER. Has sure-fire qualities which should draw patronage. Title and fact of Sills making appearance as star should get them. Suitable for any house.

SUMMARY. While this is a preposterous story in the way the characters are shunted about it nevertheless packs away a lot of sure-fire hokum—and never fails to tug at the heart strings. Milton Sills plays a New York cop and acquits himself in an able manner.

THE CAST

O'Malley	Milton Sills
Lucille Thayer	Dorothy Mackaill
Margie	Helen Rowland
Danny the Dude	Warner Richmond
Herbert Browne	Thomas J. Carrigan
Capt. Collins	Claude King
The Doctor	Allen Brander
Sgt. Patterson	Charles Graham
Clerk	Jack DeLacey

By Gerald Beaumont. Directed by Lambert Hillyer.

SYNOPSIS. New York policeman is assigned to beat which is heavily traveled by school-children. He aids the child of crook whom he has sent to prison and develops romance with school-teacher. Captures bootleggers, but allows ringleader to go as the school-teacher is engaged to him. Stripped of his shields and under suspension he wins back respect of his superiors and the love of the girl when his self-sacrifice is appreciated.

The White Monkey

(Sawyer-Lubin Production-First National—6121 Feet)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

JOHN GALSWORTHY would have a difficult time recognizing his novel in the screen version. A work primarily of a deeply psychological nature it shot home a powerful moral which the picture fails to do. Instead we have nothing more than another "triangle" feature, a wandering continuity and much meaningless comedy.

The picture gets its title from a painting of a white monkey symbolizing the modern moral code. Fleur Forsyte, a London beauty, weds Michael Mont, but continues her clandestine meetings with Desert, an artist. Bicket caught stealing books is "fired," from Michael's firm. Victorine, his wife, to aid the family budget, consents to pose in the nude for Desert. Bicket recognizes the finished painting and seeks Michael's advice. Michael to prove there is nothing wrong accompanies the youth to the artist's studio. Opening the door they find, not Bicket's wife, but Michael's. From this point on the action picks up ending, of course, with reconciliations all round.

The feature is fairly well mounted but the cast is not particularly satisfying. Barbara La Marr is given too much posing instead of acting, while George Marion is not in the least convincing as a wealthy English pater. To Thomas Holding goes the credit for the best character work, although Charles Mack is satisfactory. Henry Victor gives a cut and dried characterization of the lover. Flora Le Breton is "pretty." There is a lot of silly comedy inserted in the picture which slows the action and has nothing whatever to do with the plot,

The film is too long for the story it tells, in fact the first few reels are packed with unessentials. There is some drama in the scene in which the artist confesses his love to the husband for the latter's wife and also in the sequence in which the husband, seeking the wife of Bicket, finds his own spouse with the artist. The picture is also surfeited with subtitles.

THEME. A modern society drama revolving around the eternal triangle.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The confession of the artist to the husband that he is in love with his wife. The scene in which Michael finds Fleur with the artist, when he expects to find his former employe's wife in the studio. The gowns worn by Miss LaMarr.

DIRECTION. Has permitted checking of the action by insertions of cheap comedy. Has not succeeded in making his characters very convincing, except in one or two instances. Has given the picture an attractive mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the name of Barbara La Marr and the title. Tieup on Galworthy's book. Fashion display by using stills of star, as well as window tieups on hair, dresses, toilet articles and perfumes.

DRAWING POWER. Will satify admirers of Barbara LaMarr but may not please an intelligent clientele. Suitable for second class downtown theatres, some community houses and the towns.

SUMMARY. Don't promise your patrons too much on this one. While it is an adaptation of a very excellent novel by a noted author, it does not follow that tale very closely. However Barbara LaMarr has many admirers and many of them may overlook any shortcomings in story to see their favorite. The picture is well mounted.

THE CAST

Fleur Forsyte	Barbara LaMarr
Michael Mont	Thomas Holding
Wilfrid Desert	Henry Victor
Soames Forsyte	George Marion
Ethelbert Danby	Colin Campbell
Tony Bicket	Charles Mack
Victorine	Flora LeBreton

Adapted by Arthur Hoerl from the novel by John Galsworthy. Directed by Phil Rosen.

SYNOPSIS. Michael Mont and Wilfrid Desert are both in love with Fleur Forsyte. Michael weds her but Wilfrid continues his attentions and at last she consents to meet him at an appointed place. These meetings continue. Wilfrid confesses his love to Fleur's husband, but Fleur declares there is nothing serious. The matter is dropped. Then one day Michael sees Fleur leaving Wilfrid's studio. Tony Bicket, a former employe, learns that his wife has been posing for Wilfrid. Michael assures him there is nothing wrong. Accompanying Bicket to the studio he finds Fleur with the artist. Then comes explanations, etc., and an eventual reconciliation.

St. Louis

THEATRE and airdome cashiers continue popular with the banditry of St. Louis, Mo., and during the past week several pretty misses were added to the long string of victims of the young chaps who point their pistols promiscuously.

Saturday night Miss Marian Collins, cashier of the Queens Airdome. Maffitt and Marcus avenues, dreamed that she had been held up. Her nerves were upset by the many similar robberies in recent weeks. On Sunday night, June 14, her dream came true when four armed men, all young and roughly dressed and holding handkerchiefs over their faces rushed into the airdome. They robbed Miss Collins of $273.

When Miss Collins sought to appease the bandits with some small change one of them forced her to open the door of her cage so they could obtain all the cash in sight. So quickly did the quartette work, Manager Tom Curley who was conversing with a patron a short distance away was unaware that a robbery was in progress.

On the night of June 16 the Liberty Music Hall, 3627 Delmar boulevard, and the Arcade Airdome, Sarah street and West Pine boulevard were held-up. Three youths took $175 in cash from Miss Catherine McGinnis, cashier of the Liberty, which is a combination moving picture and musical farce house, while a short time before a trio of bandits, suspected of being the same as those who robbed Miss McGinnis held up Miss Hazel Wood, cashier of the Airdome. That robbery netted the bandits $72.

On the night of June 18 a trio of robbers held up the Compton Airdome, 3167 Easton avenue, taking $10 in cash and 5000 theatre tickets. Miss Bess Beich, cashier, tricked the trio into believing that a bag containing the tickets was filled with currency. A short time before the robbery was staged Jack Shea, manager, departed with the bulk of the night's receipts.

Later in the week the police arrested a young man who they claim has been identified by Miss Wood and another employe of the Arcade Airdome as one of the trio who held her up. The police are looking for two other youths who were with the suspect on the night of the crime.

Overcrowding of aisles will be strictly prohibited, according to a statement made at the meeting by Chief of Police Dan O'Brien. The new budget makes provisions for fifteen firemen to supervise safety conditions.

A large number of the Charlotte exchanges have turned to express shipments, as they find the express is much more satisfactory than Parcel post. In shipping by express, the film can be traced at all times, as there is a complete record of the same from the time it leaves the exchange until its is delivered to the exhibitor, as each man handling the same signs it. In shipping by parcel post this cannot be done, and it is impossible to trace or find a film that has been lost. A New York corporation has applied for an option on the Hotel Wiss property in Leroy, N. Y., owned by John Hepps, for the purpose of erecting thereon a motion picture theatre, with four stores on Main street, and an arcade going through to the theatre, which will have exits on Lake street. The company also plans to have from 20 to 25 sleeping rooms with baths and showers on the second floor for tourists and travelers with a cafeteria and lobby on the main floor. Jack Latta, a resident of Le Roy, through whom the deal is being handled, has not as yet announced the name of the Gotham corporation interested in the venture.

Baltimore

ONE of the most interesting features about the condition of business in the Monumental City and an almost sure sign as to which way the business weather vane is turning is in the advertising space taken by the various playhouses in the newspapers.

Up to the present time there has been no cut in the advertising alottment for the summer period and with the exception of the terrific hot spell which lasted for about eight days, and which gave a black eye to the box office receipts to all the theatres, the patronage has been holding up very well.

Efforts are being made by the managements of all the houses to keep the interiors as comfortable as possible during the hot weather, one theatre, the Metropolitan under the management of Bernard Depkin, Jr., having ice water served to patrons during the performances when it is very hot—the weather—not the water.

Extensive improvements are being made in the Garden Theatre, here, controlled and operated by the Combined Whitehurst Interests, while the playhouse continues to give its regular schedule of performances each day. The interior is being entirely redecorated with a new color scheme and the air washing and cooling system has been improved and enlarged. Recently about 200 chairs were added to the seating capacity and the whole house had new chairs installed. William E. Stumpf manages the Garden.

The Parkway Theatre, North Avenue at Charles St., another theatre operated by the Combined Whitehurst Interests, of which H. M. Messiter is manager, has just had the front washed and cleaned and presents a spic and span appearance.

Madeline Hoff, on the office staff of the Century Theatre, announces that she is now Mrs. G. W. Mergler, having been married on May 23 at St. Elizabeth's parish by Father Sebastian. This was quite a surprise to her many friends who wish her lots of happiness.

A well earned vacation is now being enjoyed by U. S. Brummell manager of the Century Theatre. During his vacation Howard S. Jefferson, of the Whitehurst staff, is managing the playhouse.

W. A. Miller, advertising manager of the Jewish Times, who handled all the moving picture theatre accounts and reading notices for that paper, recently suffered a serious injury when he accidently ran a knife into the palm of his hand.

George C. Wilson, Tyrone, Pa., president of the Wilson Amusement Company, operating the Rivoli Theatre, here, and Guy L. Wonders, manager of that playhouse returned to their respective homes after having participated in the golf tournament for film men at Briar Lodge Club, New York City. Mr. Wilson took down one of the prizes.

A unique method of giving moving picture news to its patrons is being used by the Garden Theatre. Besides using the unsold space for news pertaining to the players and plays, short items are used between the vaudeville numbers printed on the program.

New York and New Jersey

THE outing of the employees of Pathe Exchange, Inc., at Panchard Inn, Massapequa, Long Island, on Saturday, June 20th, proved a most enjoyable event for several hundred Patheites from the Home Office on West 45th Street and the New York and Newark Exchanges at 1600 Broadway, and the Bound Brook and Jersey City Laboratories.

Prominent New Jersey exhibitors observed around the New York exchanges this week were Louis Heiman of Rahway, Alexander Okin of Cranford and Hillside, and Sam Perry of Englewood. The controversy between Mr. Okin and Ed Carroll concerning the auburn moustache is still on. Mr. Okin states that it will stay on.

They are telling a good one on Louis Heiman. Recently, Louis and his gang from the New Empire, at Rahway, N. J., all followers of the famous sport of I. Walton, went out to snare the finny tribe. Louis took along a big block of ice so that there would be no danger of the fish becoming tainted during the hot weather. No one caught a fish.

This week comes news other changes brought about by this succession of shifts, which includes the move from C. W. Irwin, formerly manager of the Imperial theater, Columbia, S. C., to the Imperial theater at Charlotte, thus filling the position left vacant by George Brown.

J. Wright Brown has been transferred from Columbus, Ga., to Greenville, S. C.; J. L. Cartwright, from the Rialto theater, Chattanooga, Tenn., to the Strand, in Knoxville, and W. F. Brock from the Strand, Knoxville, to the Grand and Rialto theaters in Columbus. This completes the series of shifts in this territory, for Southern Enterprises.

Work is now being completed on the Stanley Company's new $3,000,000 theatre in Atlantic City and arrangements are being made for formal opening to take place as near the Fourth of July as possible. This theatre will be the finest at the shore resort and will equal in beauty and appointments any theatre found in the East.

Employees of the First National and Pathe Exchanges are making tentative plans for their annual picnics and outings, which will be held this year the later part of August when the personnel of both offices have taken their vacations. Outings are arranged late in the year in order to make it possible to have a hundred per cent attendance.

CONSTRUCTION & EQUIPMENT DEPARTMENT

Architectural Design and Modern Theatres

Outlying Districts Now Can Have Attractive Houses at Moderate Cost

THE many announcements that have been made in these columns regarding the record breaking number of new theatres being built this year and the vast investment that they represent brings to attention a very interesting fact regarding the type of house that appears to be in the majority, though not representing a major portion of the total investment in theatre building. The type of theatre referred to is the modern small town and suburban house of modest seating capacity and investment.

The remarkable features of these houses lie in their attractiveness of design and thoroughness in appointments and equipment. Architecturally, these modest theatres, in many ways, appeal to their patrons as strongly as do the larger theatres to their city clientele.

While these smaller theatres are constructed, in general, along these highly commendable lines, yet in most instances the investment they represent is in no way proportional to the impression one would glean from a casual inspection; for it appears that theatre construction and design has developed into a fine art of its own, and that during this development, which has been under way ever since the first motion picture houses were conceived, the secret of effective simplicity in interior decoration and appointment as well as pleasing architectural arrangement has been learned and applied to perfection.

It is indeed fortunate that this development has taken place at a time when it has, for better theatres in outlying districts have added a much needed stimulant to the popularity of motion pictures. These small model houses are now in a position to cultivate the patronage of a great potential clientele that previously was practically without the realms of the picture sphere.

Of the many new theatres that have been described in detail in this department of Motion Picture News, more or less pride has been exhibited by owners when supplying descriptive material, of the hundreds of thousands of dollars that were expended in construction. The tendency of the times in the building of smaller houses should change this attitude entirely; the pride of accomplishment should now lie in the excellence of the construction and attractiveness of design of the theatre in proportion to the investment represented.

As an example of the type of theatre discussed above, the Temple Theatre, Kane, Pa., which was recently opened, offers a good illustration. This house, which is shown in the accompanying illustration, follows a simple though effective architectural design and is thoroughly equipped to insure the comfort of discriminating patrons.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1200; 780 on the lower floor and 440 on the mezzanine or balcony. The retiring rooms are located on the mezzanine and main floors, while on the mezzanine a portion of the floor space is devoted to a rest room which is provided for a meeting place for theatre parties. Comfortable chairs have been provided for the patrons' convenience.

The loges located in the front of the balcony are a distinctive and charming feature of the theatre. They are furnished with comfortable velour chairs and are especially designed to accommodate theatre parties.

Splendid decorative effects have been executed and the whole interior pleases and rests the eye with a color scheme; that while approaching the gorgeous, is at the same time so delicate in harmony that there is no clashing, and a most beautiful effect is achieved.

The projection room is thoroughly equipped to insure excellent presentation.

The lobby is floored with a noiseless tile of a neat and pleasing design. The box office opens directly on the lobby.

Special provisions have been made for the safe guarding of theatre patrons by the utilization of unusually wide aisles, numerous exits and the latest fire preventive appliances.

From foundation to roof the theatre is thoroughly modern and its size and beauty are unusual for the town the size of Kane.

Interior views of the Temple theatre, Kane, Pa. This theatre is an example of the unusually fine houses that are being constructed in small centers of population. The house has a seating capacity of 1,200.

Operators Attend Canadian Workers' Convention

Delegates of Moving Picture Operators' unions and of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes from all Eastern Provinces of Canada attended the annual convention of District No. 11 of the organized workers which was held at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, Ontario, on June 19 and 20, some 25 representatives being in attendance. The Provinces represented included Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Important addresses were given by E. Andrews, representing the Ottawa Moving Picture Operators' Local; J. Roberts, president of the Ottawa Musicians Union; Tom Moore, president of the Dominion Trades Congress, Ottawa; Captain J. A. P. Haydon, president of the Ottawa Trades and Labor Council; Mayor J. P. Balharrie of Ottawa and others.

International officers present included President W. Canavan of the I. A. T. S. E., Secretary-Treasurer R. J. Green of New York and W. P. Covert of Toronto, who is the International vice-president representing Canada.

Ottawa operators and stage employes who assisted in making arrangements for the convention included R. R. Marcil, R. Gelletly, H. Ladouceur, G. Graham, W. Lodge, A. L. Goold, W. Clarke, S. Waggoner and others.

Entertainment features included a drive around the Government parks and driveways of the Canadian Capital, visits to Government Buildings and a dinner at Aylmer, Quebec, across the river from Ottawa where a fine repast of eatables and beverages was finished off.

Eastman Cooling System Increases Patronage

The efficiency of the Eastman theatre, Rochester, cooling system was demonstrated in remarkable fashion during the recent hot wave. On two days when the official weather report showed a temperature of 90 outside, the thermometers in the theatre auditorium recorded only 72, a difference of 18 degrees. Superintendent of Maintenance Clarence Livingston has been making frequent tests because this year a refrigerating equipment has been added to the air-washing process which was established when the theatre was built. Now, clean, fresh air is forced through iced-water. The other day Manager Clark placed a large poster depicting an iceberg on the side of which was the invitation to "Come inside and cool off," in front of the theatre and attracted the attention of hundreds of sweltering citizens. The poster was the work of Batiste Madalena of the Eastman poster department.

Jensen & Von Herberg Open Theatre in Astoria, Oregon

The Liberty, handsome new picture house in Italian Renaissance design built by Jensen and Von Herberg has just been opened in Astoria, Oregon. Three other theatres are under construction in Astoria, which is extensively rebuilding its downtown district which was destroyed by fire two years ago.

This theatre is reported to be the first in the state which has its organ on a hydraulic elevator, permitting it to be raised to the stage level for the concert and lowered into the pit during the showing of the picture.

Exterior and interior walls of the auditorium are finished in natural caenstone. Walls of the foyer are tiffanied. The auditorium is intended to give the effect of a Roman arena. Above the caenstone side on the level with the balcony a series of Italian scenes have been painted corresponding to the glimpse of the world outside one might get over the top of the arena wall. The paintings were done by Joe Knowles.

The Italian architectural detail has been worked out in the elaborate plaster columns of the organ chambers and in ornamental bas relief designs. Arches, one of the characteristic features of the Italian Renaissance period have been profusely used in the new structure. Furnishings further carry out the Italian design in detail. Poles supporting the box curtains are wrought iron with spear tips. Wrought iron benches take the place of chairs and seats in the foyer. Electric fixtures are wrought iron and silk and wrought iron railings enclose the orchestra pit and ornament the railing of the ramp which leads to the balcony.

Furnishings are in black and gold. Handsome black velvet curtains ornamented in gold applique designs, copies from a sixteenth century Italian cathedral, hang in the archways which divide the auditorium from the foyer. The main curtain is black velvet with upper sections in alternating black and gold velvet. The carpet is dark red with large medallions in black, gold and blue.

Blue and gold has been used in decorating the women's rest room. Furnishings here are in wicker. The men's smoking room in the basement has tiled floor, lounging chairs and smoking stands.

Lights have been placed in a cove which goes entirely around the ceiling. They are on four different circuits and four colors of bulbs are used.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1200 and the foyer is considerable larger in proportion to the size of the auditorium than that of any other theatre in Oregon.

Ghosts of the Past

IN this concluding article on the history of the Power's Projector we trace the final steps leading up to the perfection of the professional projector. Considerations of safety, convenience and improved operation were the motives impelling the new improvements, step by step.

When comparing the old with the new, it is a far cry from the "machines" with their cloth bag magazines to the present projectors with their safety containers, yet the difference in time is actually very small. A scant 25 years. Almost within the memory of every one in the motion picture profession.

It represents one of an already long list of tributes to modern ingenuity and inventiveness.

Model No. 3

This model was the first to have the adjustable intermittent movement. The adjustment consisted of two small eccentric bronze bushings which had a slot on either end so that they could be turned readily with a screw driver. Model No. 3 also had the first lower take-up sprocket and pulley attached to same to rewind the film on a reel hanger which was attached to a table board instead of using a bag as formerly.

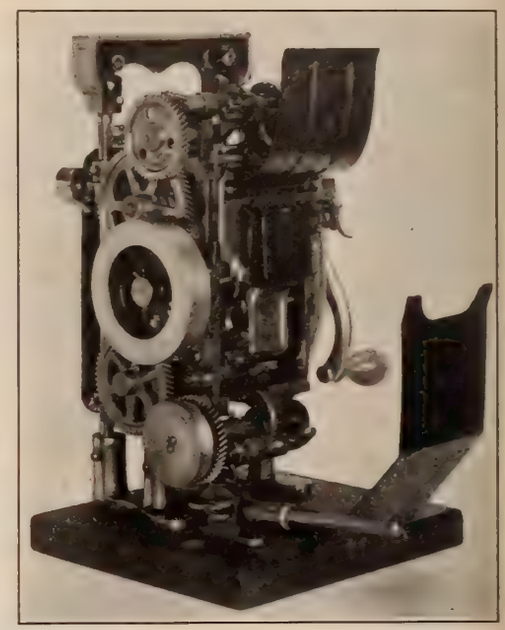
In this type (Fig. 3.) Nicholas Power returned to the method of framing used in model No. 1, that is the framing was done by moving the entire mechanism instead of using a separate framing carriage as in model No. 2. The framing device consisted merely of a spiral spring on a vertical rod attached to the guide rod of the machine. This projector also had the first lower take-up bracket consisting of a brass bracket and roller which was adjustable to set as far from or as near to the sprocket as desired.

The intermittent roller was attached to the gate instead of using a bracket attached directly to the mechanism. In this model we find the first stamped aperture plate which is screwed on to the frame and can be moved or replaced. This aperture plate is practically the same as used in the present day projector. In the earlier models and especially in No. 2, the aperture plate was part of the front of the mechanism, simply having the space for the aperture stamped out.

(Fig. 4) Model number 4, which did away with the interference of the fly wheel during threading.



In Model No. 3 the gears were reduced from 25, as in No. 2, to 15 and further reductions were made in later models. We also find a return to the metal strips wound around the gate as used in model No. 1. The fire shutter was omitted. In these two points it is evident that no progress was made and in fact some ground had been lost in returning to the methods used on model No. 1. Ground had also been lost by returning to the framing of the entire mechanism used in No. 1 instead of using a separate framing carriage as used in No. 2.

Real progress was made, however, in the following instances:—

The lower take up feed sprocket.

The separate stamped aperture plate.

The biggest improvement on this model was the lower take up sprocket which enabled the running of film on to a reel thus dispensing with the use of a bag. The great reduction in gears was also a very decided improvement.

(Fig. 5) Model number 5. The most important improvement was the attachment of the automatic friction fire shutter.

Model No. 4

At this stage in the development of its projector Nicholas Power returned to the separate framing carriage instead of framing by means of entire mechanism. The intermittent movement was placed on the left hand side instead of on the right as in all previous mode's. (Fig. 4). This represented a very decided improvement because it did away with the interference which the fly wheel offered in threading the machine. The fly wheel was also on the right side of the machine.

While changing the fly wheel and gears from the right hand to the left hand side facilitated threading, it also must have been a considerable mechanical improvement because it also permitted of a more direct drive thus reducing the number of gears.

In this model we find a return to the use of the fire shutter with the addition of a cooling plate. This marked a decided step forward. The upper fire shield was also introduced for the first time.

Other improvements consisted of a stamped gate and a metal stand for attaching this mechanism. In model No. 4 there was a special cast iron top so made that the upper magazine could be screwed to the mechanism. This is the first model in which the upper and lower magazines were used.

Power's No. 1, 2 and 3 were comparatively crude and simple devices and in No. 4

The final safeguard for success—

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

Requisites of Effective Lobby Advertising Displays

By Samuel Weinstein, Pres., Menger, Ring & Weinstein, Inc.

NOT long ago, the writer had occasion to call on a theatre that had but recently been built. From a point of appearance, it represented the last word in architecture. The lobby was about 75 ft. deep, covered with marble to a height of about 8 ft. with marble columns placed at every 10 ft., and fine electric fixtures evenly hung between them. It was magnificent, but did it tell what was playing? Did it tell what attractions were coming? No—not a bit of it. It would have made a fine entrance to a public library, or a town hall, but as a theatre lobby, as a means of attracting people's attention to your wares, it utterly failed of its purpose. There had apparently been given no thought whatsoever to the idea that the front and lobby are the exhibitor's show-windows. The prevailing thought in the minds of those who planned it apparently was to make a beautiful structure, and to that extent, ungrudging credit must be given—they have succeeded.

After the first thrill was over, after the admiring exclamations from the firstnighters had abated, people began to look at the walls from right to left, with inquiring glances. What are you playing tonight? What are you going to play tomorrow? was plainly written on their faces, but the cold marble gave no response, as though in its haughty grandeur, it would not stoop to talk to the common folks. It lacked warmth; it did not have the melodrama atmosphere which is so essential to a moving picture theatre.

The owner saw something was lacking, but could not put his finger on it. The writer suggested that he needed some lobby frames —some wall cases; not one or two small pieces grudgingly put up, but a generous display of plush, mirrors, photographs and show cards. "That will cover all my beautiful marble,' he rejoined plaintively, but it had to be done.

By the time the sketches and plans were ready, it was quite clear that one-half of the marble would be covered. Being of a practical turn of mind, the owner sat down, pencil in hand, and began to figure. After considerable figuring, he dryly remarked, Had you come a little sooner, I would have saved about 500 sq. ft. of marble, at $3.50 per sq. ft. In fact, had I thought of this before, I would not have spent so much on the walls altogether, because there is not enough of it left after your cases go up to make it worth while elaborating on so much; a couple of coats of paint, and a few electric fixtures might have done the work."

What is true of the lobby, is true of the outside, only much more fatal in its effects on the box office receipts. How often have you seen a beautiful theatre with a terra cotta, or marble front, and a tiny little hole in the wall about 1½ x 2 ft., in which to show coming attractions. Indeed, unless the passerby is of a very inquisitive turn of mind, he will have a hard time finding out what it is, whether it's a dispensary, a post office, or a movie.

The writer is on his way now to an enterprising theatre owner, who writes: "I have window ledges on my outside piers, but believe I will have to tear them down so that I can put up a good frame." Yes, tear it down, but how much did it cost to put it up and how much will it cost to tear down ?

It may not be commonly known, but lobby frames or wall cases can be put up at relatively small cost. It is self-evident that one can save enough on the marble man and decorator to more than cover the cost of his lobby frame bill, providing it is taken in consideration when in the initial stages of placing the contracts.

Y., says: "We decided to open our season ahead of time and without any advance advertising of any kind, we put the Automobile Calliaphone outfit on the street for 3 hours, and opened last evening to the largest opening we have ever had. If anyone in this section is in doubt regarding the advertising value of the Calliaphone, refer them to me. It's a wonderful instrument, and far, far beyond my expectations. Signed Geo. Carr."

We furnish you a complete Ford Ton Truck Auto Calliaphone outfit, ready to go—ready to play, for prices as low as $1355.

we begin to see the present Power's Projector taking shape. While improvements have been made, the appearance of the Power's No. 4 mechanism closely resembles the one now in use.

Model No. 5

This model (Fig. 5) closely resembled its immediate predecessor, No. 4.

The most important improvement made was the attachment of the automatic friction fire shutter as used in present day projectors. The lower fire shield was also introduced on No. 5. The chain of gears was changed from straight to spiral and although the automatic fire device constitutes the only patented improvement there was a decided improvement in the construction of the projector as a whole.

The Geneva movement was retained up until No. 5 model after which the Power's Roller Pin Intermittent Movement was evolved and applied to the succeeding models, No. 6 and No. 6B.

The germ of the last two mechanisms was contained in Models No. 4 and No. 5 which these models closely resemble in a number of ways. Indeed, the improvements from there on can be said to consist of refinements serving to bring the projector nearer to a state of perfection.

The Future Projector

This brief history of the professional motion picture projector leads one to wonder what the next change in its form will be—if any there will be.

The projector of today is, generally speaking, a perfected model of that invented years ago by C. Francis Jenkins; then a clerk in the Patent Office at Washington.

It consists essentially of an upper magazine for holding the film; a top sprocket for feeding the film to the intermittent sprocket; an intermittent movement for securing the proper optical liaison between the individually projected picture frames; a lower sprocket for feeding the spent film into a lower magazine. These elements, in one form or another are present in practically every type of motion picture projector. The improvements which have been made were directed toward receiving a convenient and smooth operation of the parts just named.

With one possible exception it is doubtful whether any radical improvements can be made on these elements since they apparently do all that is required of them in a satisfactory manner.

The intermittent movement, however, has been attacked with the object of removing it since certain marked advantages would result therefrom. In the first place, wear and tear on the film would be considerably reduced which would result in the saving of thousands of dollars annually. In the second place the screen illumination would be increased by fully one hundred percent which would again result in an annual saving of thousands of dollars in the form of reduced power bills.

Whether or not the continuous projector is practicable is still an open question. It has been tried and found to work but such complicated mechanism is required at this stage of the game as to render it unfeasible.

It is entirely within the realm of practical imagination that the future may bring forth a satisfactory continuous projector with its inherent economical advantages over the present intermittent type.

Calliaphone Proving Successful Advertising Stunt

What is claimed to be one of the most effective advertising device used by theatres is the combination Automobile-Calliaphone outfit, which consists of a Calliaphone mounted on an automobile and used for street advertising as well as outlying territory.

The Calliaphone is a new toned musical instrument made in mode's with low volume for inside theatre use, giving a pipe organ effect. The same instrument is made in loud volume that can be heard for nearly a mile, it is claimed, and is used for outside advertising purposes, or mounted in the balcony of theatres. The Tangley Company at Muscatine, Iowa, manufacturers of the Calliaphone recently advises that theatres have been using these instruments extensively. It is also noted that in cities where mechanically played instruments have been prohibited, upon hearing the Calliaphone, a permit has been issued for its use.

Three theatres which have been using these instruments to excellent advantage, it is reported are:

The Santa Barbara Theatre, owner, Abner Kline; Wells Theatre, Va., manager, Jake Wells; Celoran Park, Jamestown, Geo. Carr.

Cooling Sign Announces 100 Per Cent Price Increase

Jake Rosenthal, who runs a ten cent theatre in Troy, N. Y., installed a couple of ventilating fans a week or so ago, and finding his house much cooler, decided to advertise the fact. He put a large sign out in front which was worded "20° cooler inside." Instead of getting more business, Mr. Rosenthal's receipts promptly took a slump. He could not understand the reason and then decided to place one of his men outside of the theatre to see if he could learn the trouble.

It might be said that Mr. Rosenthal's patronage is made up largely of foreign born, or those who can not boast of any great amount of education. No sooner was Mr. Rosenthal's man stationed in front of the theatre than two Italians who had always patronized the house, came along. They took one look at the sign which read to them as follows: "20 cents, cooler inside." The Italians did not care particularly how cool it was, but they did care about what appeared to them as a 100 per cent boost in admission prices. Mumbling to themselves, they proceeded on down the street in the direction of another ten cent theatre. Mr. Rosenthal lost no time in yanking the offending sign from in front of the theatre and business immediately responded.

Two New Marr & Colton Organs for Cleveland

The Marr & Colton Co. installed an organ in the West Park theatre, operated by Lefkowitz & Polster. This beautiful theatre was recently opened and is attracting excellent crowds.

The Euclid Theatre in Cleveland, operated by the Ivanhoe Theatre Co., was opened May 22nd and this theatre also uses a Marr & Colton organ.

Plans for $100,000 House for St. Louis

St. Louis, Missouri is to have a new $100,000 motion picture theatre, the plans of which are being drawn by Preston J. Bradshaw, which is to be erected at the corner of Midwest and Southwest Avenues. The owner of the new theatre is G. Skouras.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Smooth as Satin"—F. B. O. Capitol, New York

Telegraph: "'Smooth As Satin' cleverly contrived and a genuinely amusing crook drama, well directed, adeptly put together, with . . . humor and dexterous twists of plot. It is unquestionably a good audience picture."

American: "'Smooth As Satin' is far above the average of crook plays. A most unusual train wreck adds more excitement to the scene of a handcuffed convict struggling with a detective. As the train rushes into a tunnel, an entire mountain collapses on it. There's a lot to enjoy in this picture."

Telegram: "'Smooth As Satin' is a good movie. It is excellent in the climax, when a lot of suspense is worked up by a gradually widening hole in the roof of a tunnel and a speeding express, bearing our principal performers, shooting into the tunnel just in time for the crash. It is one of the most convincing wrecks seen in a long time, and a distinct gasp from the audience could be heard as the roof of the tunnel fell on the train."

Evening World: "There's a very fast-moving melodrama at the Capitol, with plenty of thrills in it. And for the most part its story is . . . enthralling. Evelyn Brent takes the lead in this picture and puts over her crook character in great shape. She is at all times convincing and manages to hold the sympathetic interest of the audience. There is a thrilling wreck when a whole hillside tumbles into the tunnel it is traversing. Feature is breath-taking. Movie fans who like their melodrama will have a great time watching 'Smooth As Satin.' And there's a double treat for admirers of Evelyn Brent."

Graphic: "'Smooth as Satin' based on the play by Bayard Veiller, the week's offering at the Capitol Theatre, is the best crook story we have ever seen in pictures. In fact, it is one of the best films we have seen on Broadway in many a week. If this is the regular summer fare, it's rather a pity summer doesn't last the year 'round."

"Recompense"—Warner Bros Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.

Post: "The team of Blue and Prevost, the lovingest couple of Filmland, is proving a hit this week. Monte and Marie were never more suited to their romantic roles than in 'Recompense.' Marie is as cute as she can be and Monte as manly. The direction has been artistically handled. Shots from war days are some of the best I've seen and the titles are beautifully colored."

"Steele of Royal Mounted"—Warner Bros., Rialto, New York

Mordaunt Hall, Times: "Better than the usual run of films dealing with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Stuart Holmes is splendidly malignant as Bucky Nome and John Toughey is effective and natural in the role of Colonel MacGregor."

"Recompense"—Warner Bros., Majestic, Shreveport, Ia.

Times: "This is one time when a novelist is accorded unlimited tribute for the marvelous piece of characterization that his best seller has become on the screen. Robert Keable's sensational novel lost nothing of its remarkably vivid reality by being transposed to the silver sheet, and Warner Bros., who produced the picture, are to be highly commended on the excellent results they have achieved. Marie Provost and Monte Blue are primarily responsible for the gripping, spell-binding intensity of the production."

"Recompense" — Warner Bros., Staley, Trenton.

Times: "Audiences are in for a treat. They have the opportunity of enjoying a best seller among books reproduced to the last thrill and a gasp of dramatic romance. 'Recompense' held the audience fascinated in their seats last night."

"Kiss Me Again"—Warner Bros., Blue Mouse, Seattle.

Times: "A marvelous piece of impersonation on the part of Marie Prevost, while Monte Blue adds another triumph to the long list of picture characters he has created. Lubitsch in this offering has given to the screen a wholesome humorous production."

"The Boomerang"—B. P. Schulberg, Criterion, Los Angeles

Times: "Bert Lytell and Anita Stewart do the best work of their two careers. Donald Keith holds great promise in the juvenile role."

Jack Stewart, Manager of the First National Company in Brussels, Belgium.

Examiner: "Many of the episodes are highly amusing. With Bert Lytell and Anita Stewart in the leading roles the picture is well acted and the romance attractive."

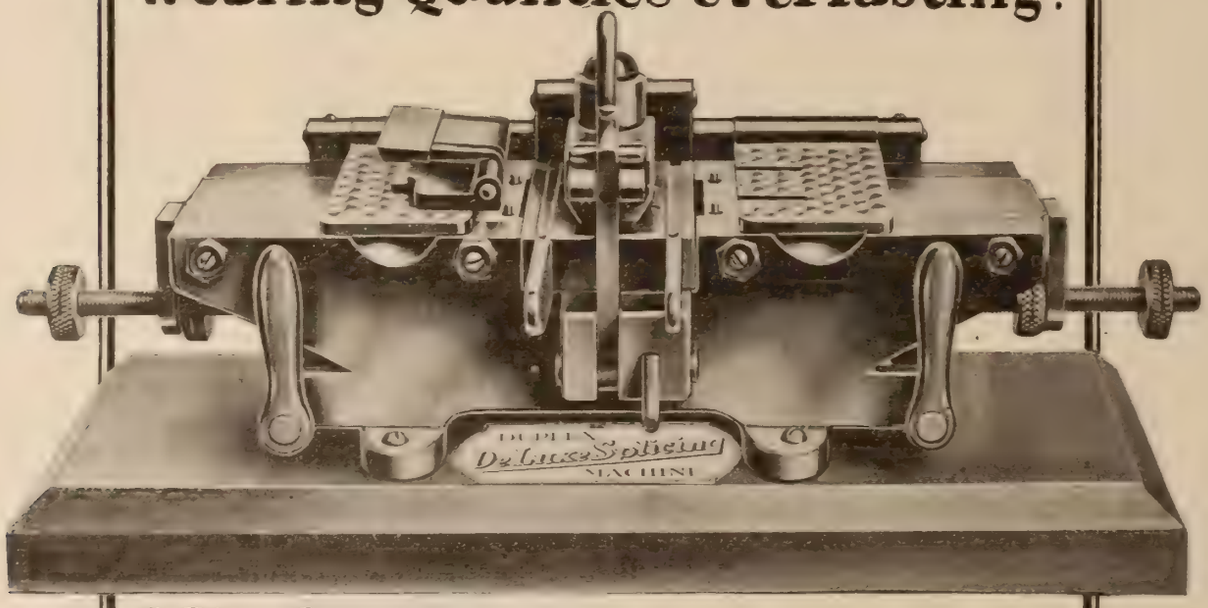
Journal: "The sparkle and pep of this scintillating comedy are admirably sustained by the cast. New frills and clever situations are added in the adaptation."

Record: "Bert Lytell as the doctor does excellently in a light part. Anita Stewart prettier than ever, swings from the melodramatic aspect of the play to its comedy with great versatility."

"Lost — A Wife" — Paramount, Rivoli, New York

Herald-Tribune.—The work of Greta Nissen was a revelation. Miss Nissen is by all odds the screen's most captivating recent acquisition."

The Times.—"Miss Nissen is a Scandanavian with a Parisian cachet. She is fair, and the dressing of her blonde hair impresses one as having an influence torn between alarm and mischief. Miss Nissen is sure, natural and graceful in her expressions and movements. She times every lengthy scene to perfection and is never awkard or out of character. No matter how frivolous the scene may be she gives a sincere and earnest portrayal, always obtaining excellent results with an originality rarely beheld on the screen."



World: "Miss Nissen is the glamourous young blonde who added such devastating beauty to the pantomime of 'A Beggar on Horseback.' Her radiant good looks survive on the screen. She shows some indications of intelligent acting, though all this role requires of her are languishing glances, which she achieves with fatal results."

A Tip to the Wise

TO YOU theatre men who know that good projection is as important as good pictures—who know that a good light source in a good machine will draw patronage to any theatre regardless of its size or location—to you who want to improve your projection, we recommend a new high intensity arc—the "HC" lamp.

The "HC" lamp is the Sperry high intensity arc lamp, used for high powered searchlights, redesigned and adapted to motion picture projection service.

The Sperry lamp was chosen by government experts for army and navy searchlights because of its brilliancy, whiteness and steadiness. These most desirable characteristics are outstanding features of the "HC" lamp.

Twice the Light From Current Consumed

The "HC" lamp shoots a snow white beam of searchlight intensity on the screen. It brings out all the beauty of a picture. It presents pictures in a manner that patrons appreciate and enjoy. It justifies the fine arts of picture making. It is a vast improvement over an ordinary arc—gives more than twice as much light on the screen, yet consumes no more current.

Simple to Operate

The mechanism of the "HC" lamp is so simple and the parts so accessible that any Projectionist can operate and care for it without preliminary instructions.

There are no coils, magnets or third electrodes used with the automatic feeding mechanism.

The rate of feeding of either carbon can be regulated independently of the others and these adjustments are so graduated as to give an infinite number of rates of speed.

The lamp is equipped with an arc controller that need not be hand fed, during the running of an entire double reel.

An Ideal Set Up

The "HC" lamp is a light source that merits use in the best projection machines.

That's why it is endorsed by the builders of Simplex.

A Simplex projector, equipped with an "HC" arc, ensures high quality projection, —better patronage—greater profits.

You are interested in new developments and improvements. Mail the coupon and get full information on the "HC" lamp. There is no obligation.

5 Questions — you should ask every film salesman —

1. If I contract for your service, what real help will you give me in putting over the pictures with the public?

2. Will all your pictures play first run, so that I can cash in on the publicity and advertising placed by the big theatres?

3. Is your product backed consistently by national advertising? What mediums do you use and how frequently? Let me see copies of forthcoming ads.

4. Does your company maintain a good live exploitation department working for my benefit?

5. What is your company doing, aside from pushing your own product, to increase the public's liking and respect for motion pictures in general?

Big Chance to Smash All Summer Records!

PARAMOUNT offers you in "THE MANICURE GIRL," starring Bebe Daniels, a practical and easy method for boosting summer-time receipts sky-high.

In the first place, the picture is THERE. It's a breezy, refreshing comedy of Broadway's beauty parlors, with Bebe playing the cutie who cuts your cuticle with all her accustomed dash and allure. The cast includes also Edmund Burns, Hale Hamilton, Charlotte Walker and Victor Moore. Frank Tuttle, who made the very successful "Miss Bluebeard," is the director. Story by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, authors of "Upstairs and Down" and many other stage hits. Screen play by Townsend Martin.

MORE than the

A great dramatic story that grew greater in the making.

A story so big in showmanship possibilities that Hunt Stromberg was literally compelled to produce it on a more lavish scale than was originally planned. Characters that demand the superlative in histrionic ability—with a cast that meets these requirements.

These considerations have made it necessary to adjust the sales quota to meet the increased new negative cost—an increase more than justified by the amplification of original production plans.

The thousands of exhibitors who have already booked the picture are in the fortunate position of being able to profit by this enhancement of production plans, and clean up many extra dollars at the original contract price.

Don't Buy Just Lamps

ALL lamps of the same size (wattage) consume the same amount of current. But all lamps of the same wattage do not give the same amount of light. The amount of light given by any lamp depends on its quality. Some lamps give less and less light the longer they burn. Others maintain their initial lighting power over a long period of service. To get full value from the current you buy, use lamps that give maximum light from current consumed.

EDISON MAZDA LAMPS are the product of years of research and development in one of the world's greatest research laboratories. Every new achievement in the science of lamp-making is incorporated in Edison MAZDA Lamps. Put Edison MAZDA Lamps in your sockets and get maximum light from the current you buy.

Edison MAZDA Lamps are made in a variety of styles and sizes to meet every requirement of the theatre, i. e., auditoriums, signs, marquee, lobby, stage, stereopticon and projection. For decorative lighting a wide selection of colored lamps is available.

Save 15% on your Lamp Cost

To theatres whose annual lamp requirements do not exceed $75.00 a discount of 15% will be given by any electrical store or theatre supply dealer selling Edison MAZDA Lamps. Additional discounts will be allowed on larger contracts.

For details of discounts, terms, etc., and for free booklets on theatre lighting fill out and mail the attached coupon.

Free Lighting Service

The first step towards good lighting is to use good lamps. The next, is to use them right. Our Lighting Service Engineers are always available for advice or practical assistance in the lighting of any theatre large or small.

These Engineers will plan your complete lighting arrangement or advise on any part of it. Their services are free on request and entail no obligation.

MAIN STREET & BROADWAY

The most important place in the world is the town where you live!

They can put up a half-dozen Woolworth buildings on Broadway, and nobody pays any attention to them.

But let somebody start something on "Main Street" and everybody stops to look, listen, knock or boost.

A rose festival, trotting meet, or county fair in your town Is worth more to you on the screen than your feature!

KINOGRAMS gets the important happenings on Main Street as well as Broadway.

It is the only news reel giving constant, efficient, and truly co-operative service to the exhibitor.

And KINOGRAMS HAS BEEN DOING IT FOR SIX WHOLE YEARS!

To Protect Your Business Buy the Best Short ADVERTISE

If you are one of the Doubting Thomases—if you are not yet convinced that good Short Subjects give you your best weapon for protecting your business—if you still do not feel sure that Short Subjects will make Added Profits for you when properly advertised and exploited—pick up any of the big trade publications and read what others are doing with them.

The editors of the big trade papers, men of broad vision, trained observers of the industry, study this question from all angles and give you an unbiased opinion. The trend of the whole industry, the best thought of the leading exhibitors, are presented in their columns.

Read what they say about the importance of the Short Subject today!

By DANNY in Film Daily

Do not overlook the proper protection to your programs which short subjects give. See to it that you protect yourself with the right kind of short subject material which will not only insure your program when your feature happens to be good, or unusually good, but make certain that your supply includes sufficient unusually good short subjects to bolster those programs where you know you are going to need a lot of help. Real help.

There are exhibitors who, even today, are continuing the double feature program. Many have abandoned this ill-advised idea. In New England particularly they like double features. But the wise showman who would not tire his audience might well appreciate what other exhibitors have long since learned: that a good short subject program run with a weak sister feature will send a patron out feeling much better than two of these weak ones thrown together just to make a big bill.

From Exhibitors Herald

That there is a genuine public demand for short subjects is evident in the weekly experience of any box-office. It is most strikingly evident, perhaps, in the great attendance that marks the rare occasion when a short subject really is exploited.

The astounding aspect of the whole proposition lies in the fact that, despite these everywhere visible evidences of the public demand for short subjects, exhibitors continue blandly to buy them, exhibit them, and KEEP IT A SECRET!

From Moving Picture World

We can't for the life of us understand the exhibitor attitude towards his short subjects.

We have been long enough in editorial harness to be able to see two sides to almost any question. But here is one that stumps us.

It seems so obvious

If an exhibitor places a subject on his screen—whether it be a thousand feet or ten thousand—he does so with the feeling that it is going to please the majority of those sitting out front.

Doesn't it stand to reason then that there are many who ARE NOT OUT FRONT who might have been there had they known of the subject on the screen?

I'm getting so that I can't argue about it any more. It's like trying to convince a drowning man that water is wet.

ROBERT E. WELSH

From Exhibitors Trade Review

But over and above everything else, when it comes to the exhibitor's advertising and exploitation of pictures, care should be taken to emphasize and advertise varied entertainment.

Stop long enough to consider this question: How would you go about laying out a dinner that would appeal to the tastes of the majority of your customers? How would you arrange a picnic for their entertainment? How would you make up a newspaper for them to read?

You would give them variety in every case. Otherwise they would walk out on you.

That's the inevitable answer. More variety. Less stress on a single item of the program that is apt to prove a flop with half your crowd. Feature pictures, of course. But plenty of short subjects, well selected, heavily stressed in advertising and publicity.

Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:

It is so seldom that anyone in the show business gets more than he contracts for so that when he does he is tempted to go out and tell the world about it.

I wish to take this opportunity to tell you how pleased we are with the Arctic Nu-Air fan which we installed last week and have used through one of the hottest weeks that we have ever had.

We have a 950 seat house with a large balcony and were in doubt as to whether the fan would cool our house sufficiently. Your salesmen was positive in his assertions that it would but we are skeptical of all salesman's enthusiasms.

We have used the fan for a week now with the temperature at 90 to 98 and with full houses part of the time and even on the hottest night with a full house everyone was comfortable even to the last row in the balcony.

I believe that this blower is the equal if not the superior of ventilating systems which would cost us $1500.00 for an installation.

It has been a life-saver for us and we are looking forward to a good Summer season because we know that we have the cool breezes when and where we want them.

Wishing you success and many more sales,

Very truly yours,
Diehl Mcre

Intense Brilliance

Twice your present screen brilliancy will be obtained when you install Peerless Reflector Lamps, for these lamps project more light at 25 amperes than other types of arc lamps do at 100 amperes and more. In addition, a white evenly illuminated screen, which materially improves the quality of your picture is at all times before your audience.

The great saving in current and carbon consumption by Peerless Lamps more than pays for their cost during the first year. This remarkable economy of operation along with its unparalleled projection results makes Peerless Lamps an indispensable equipment for all progressive theatres.

You can have this remarkable apparatus demonstrated to you in your own theatre without cost or obligation. Just fill out and mail the attached coupon.

VOL. XXXII NEW YORK, JULY 11, 1925 NO. 2

Wanted: Showmen

AFTER all, what we need most and lack most in this business are—showmen.

Whatever this intangible thing called showmanship is, it is the spark for the whole industrial machine. And even the ablest man can't go far without it—in this business.

Commonly, we speak of producers and exhibitors—successful ones, as good showmen, but the term is more democratic than that, much more.

Just recently an actor, Douglas Fairbanks, was acclaimed a great showman, the occasion being his splendid box office attraction, "Don Q." Well, he is. And so is Mary Pickford; and so are Chaplin and Lloyd. But they are really producers, you say. True, in that they conceive and execute their productions; but this quality of showmanship is also apparent in other successful screen players, some of whom are not classified as producers.

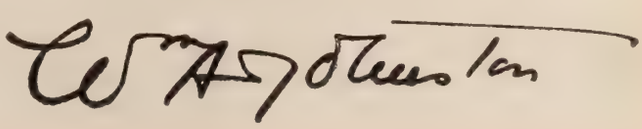
We would cite as clever showmen: Norma Talmadge, Adolph Menjou, Raymond Griffith, Emil Jannings, Tom Mix, Lewis Stone, Corinne Griffith, and others.

D. W. Griffith and Ernst Lubitsch make electric light names of unknown players. Lubitsch has set new standards of production finesse. Griffith, despite some odd mistakes in production judgment, has made most of the great shows of the screen. James Cruze can tell a story and a great one, like "The Covered Wagon," with a camera. They are showmen—producers if you like, but producers because they are showmen, not because they run producing organizations.

And of how many so-called producers can we say that they are showmen? Too few.

Then there's the writing man. One, like Harold Bell Wright, who can write a book which a million or more people will buy, is a showman. And so is the playwright and also the adaptor who scores a dramatic success. When we say the story is the thing we mean that the writer is a showman.

And there's the advertising man. He makes many a picture's success. In any field your successful publicist is essentially a showman; he succeeds in proportion to his showmanship; the coiners of "The Spotless Town," "Sunny Jim," "Phoebe Snow" and the like were showmen of first rank. But in this field of the show business itself your advertising man is either a good showman or a mere rubber stamp.



In distribution, in the building of theatre circuits, in the planning of franchises, etc., it is not the mere organizer who wins out; it is the man with show-vision, the man who visualized and with sheer enthusiasm built the structure; he counts heavily, even if another showman must come along and run the works.

J. J. Kennedy, builder of the General Film Company, was the greatest handler of men and films the business has ever known; but he wasn't a showman and his power ceased when films became shows. And I can cite many another film man of business genius along other lines who has progressed only as far as his limitations as a showman would let him.

Adolph Zukor is generally reckoned as a business strategist. If I'm not a hopeless judge, he is still more a man of show-vision and enthusiasm, in fact a genuine impresario.

* * * * *

Good business judgment is highly essential in this or any other field. But with your genuine showman the commercial end is not the only urge. He's a man who has really got something to express and who really wants to express it, and knows how the public will like to have it expressed.

AN EDITOR

The Week in Review

SOL LESSER, in New York on a whirlwind business trip booked a million dollars worth of film from one company in one day. Which indicates pretty well how the young industry is geared up these days.

"Was the M. P. NEWS of service in so large a transaction?" we asked.

"Yes, of course. A good trade paper is always indispensable."

The air is thick with rumors about the sale of West Coast Theatres to various producers. A New York paper carried a story—a baseless one—last week. The rumors have favored Paramount as a purchaser. A half dozen interests—all prominent and including the vaudeville people have been after the big circuit.

The low-down—to date, on the situation is as follows: Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers will probably sell their interests; Ramish may not. The purchaser will not be Paramount, our guess is that it is Fox.

The sale of the Lesser-Gore interests will not disturb the First National franchise for the California territory, which also carries with it an interest in the First National New York franchise.

Sol Lesser will not leave the picture business. We opine not, but that he will continue—not so strenously, but prominently as ever in its constructive progress. A keen, able young man, and a credit in every way to any field of business.

West Coast Theatres, by the way, just announce the completion of two new and big houses: At San Bernardino, 1600 seats and at Long Beach, 2300 seats; large stages, costly draperies and furnishings, lighting effects, ventilating systems, Wurlitzer organ, opera chairs, etc.

WITH "Don Q", "The Gold Rush" and "Little Annie Rooney", United Artists starts off the season with a rush. Reports from the coast on "Little Annie Rooney"—in advance of any public presentation, are most favorable; as for "Don Q" and "The Gold Rush" the consensus of opinion is that these are the best box-office pictures from Fairbanks and Chaplin to date. It will be interesting to compare figures at the Strand theatre on "The Gold Rush" as against "The Kid" which so far holds the record there.

CITING "Don Q", "Beggar on Horseback", "I'll Show You The Town", "Lost—A Wife", "Siege" and "Smooth as Satin" as outstanding pictures, a New York newspaper critic says that a reviewer's life in dog days is not so bad after all. But what about all the other pictures, he asks? And what can be done to cure mediocrity and sameness? If no prescription will work why not revive some of the older but better offerings? He concludes with the surmise that New York has more good picture theatres than good pictures. Which somewhat demolishes the trade belief that good pictures are knocking at the theatre door and can't get in. Looking in from the outside carries generally a clearer vision than the reverse process. Maybe, no, probably,—he's right.

HAL ROACH—a showman, by the way—had some interesting things to say across the luncheon table on his last hurried visit to New York. He plans to make feature comedies this year—with the word feature underlined; and since Roach is a doer, not a talker, we look for results.

In that amiable parting of the ways that took place between Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach, the latter took the stand that two reels was the proper length for a comedy.

"But I can make them in eight reels," said Lloyd.

"Yes, you can," said Roach, "But it's a wizard's job. And, anyway, to make the one right one you've got to make half a dozen at the same time and select the best. That isn't my idea of comedy production."

"Well, good luck to you," said Lloyd.

"And good luck to you," said Roach.

And it appears that both were right.

BRIEFLY, Roach proposes to put money and stars and stories and high class acting into his two reel comedies—to such an extent that they will be featured in the theatres' electric lights and newspaper advertising. Features that will be featured.

And this is his showman's viewpoint of the thing: "Let us say," he explained, "that you and I are contemplating the movies tonight. There are, say, three theatres to choose from. One has A star in a feature, another B star, and the third C star. At least that's the order in which they attract us. But suppose that, at the theatre playing the C star—the one we like the least—there appears the name, in equal prominence, of a feature comedy star—aren't we pretty apt to dismiss uncertainty and buy that admission? I think so."

And Hal Roach thinks pretty clearly. "Our Gang" comedies are now contracted for by over eleven thousand theatres. There's a record! And the first ones, released three years ago, are still bringing in a tidy sum each month.

LORD LEE now joins the round table of British objectors to American films. They misrepresent American life, he asserts, and give wrong and harmful notions abroad of our social and moral standards. And The New York Times points out that his words are to be seriously weighed here, since "no Englishman knows America better or is a firmer friend of this country."

Everyone will agree that the makers of American films, supplying as they do the wants of the theatres of the world, bear a responsibility the seriousness of which can hardly be reckoned—certainly by any comparison. Every American director ought either to realize this or quit fooling with dynamite.

It's a mighty serious problem; fact is, it's a governmental problem. But we would like to convey the word abroad that much is being done to safeguard the American picture, and that the situation—right now, at least—is not as bad as Lord Lee paints it.

For one thing Will Hays has laid the matter directly and definitely before the producers, and has then gone that necessary step further and put it right up to the directors themselves and their official organization. Secondly, the most misrepresentative of our films were those that emanated from a brief epidemic of sex stuff, pictures filmed from current novels or plays that emanated from youthful or senile brainstorms but nevertheless designed to catch the dollars. This is the one thing that must never be done again—the putting forth on the screens of the world the salacious book or play that would in its own limited environment do much less harm and live but a brief while.

WHILE calling at Universal City last Spring, Carl Laemmle asked me what I thought of "The Homemakers" as a film story, and when I enthused over the book he said: "Very well, you help me select a director." We decided upon King Baggot—to give, among other things, the sound masculine treatment needed by such a tale of triumphant femininity.

It is gratifying, now, to read a preview of the picture by Tamar Lane. He says: "Here is one of the finest picturizations of American life ever presented on the screen . . . refreshing and enjoyable as a cool west wind in midsummer . . . this is the finest film that King Baggot has directed in years."

WHICH reminds me to speak of "Siege," a recent Universal release at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and one of the finest pieces of direction we have had on Broadway in some time; and, again, of another Capitol picture, "Smooth as Satin," because B. P. Fineman is scoring as a producer and is bringing Evelyn Brent to the fore steadily and surely. Universal, by the way, has recently had five pictures—and F. B. O. four—at the big Broadway houses.

FOR the past ten years we have always been sure of a call from one exhibitor every time he came to New York; and each time we were also sure of some good sound ideas on exhibiting pictures. Frank Newman now goes to manage Paramount's big houses in Los Angeles, and the Kansas City Star cites him as a successful American having, at forty years of age, made a fortune and a salary contract that most any man would envy. The figures are not as important as the fact that he began life in a foundry at a meagre wage, that he worked hard, steadily, straightforwardly, and to-day has the name of one of the best business showmen in the country and the respect and confidence of everyone who knows him.

OF all the editorials on the mooted subject of "Independence"—and including our own—the most interesting is by Wid Gunning in his June issue of Wids, under the title "What Is an Independent?" Here are some paragraphs:

"If we are going to decide that the independents are only the little fellows, we won't get very far. Never in the tumultuous years of this game's activity has there been anyone to come forth with a very definite description of what is an independent. For a long time an independent was anybody who was not hooked up with the General Film. Then for a long time an independent was anyone who was not hooked up with Paramount. This year the general discussion seems to indicate that an independent is anyone who is not hooked up with the Big Three, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Famous-Players-Lasky and First National.

"The big laugh about all this to me is the fact that Metro, Goldwyn and Mayer have been three of our greatest independents. Not so many years ago Famous Players an Lasky as separate units were independent leaders. Certainly First National will still explain to you that they are the most independent of the independents.

"If I were running a theatre today and someone came to me with the request that I turn over the playing time of my theatre, which is, after all, the same as turning over my theatre, I would certainly register a quiet smile while I inquired as to just who was to be the master mind that would do better for me than I might do for myself. I don't care what conversation goes with the effort to gather play dates together, the actual activity resolves itself down to a simple attempt to formulate a method of group buying. Such a movement is nothing whatever except the very thing which most of the exhibitor politicians yell about, the so-called menace of the producer who owns many theatres or the theatre chain which dominates a section of the country.

"As a theatre owner I would give very serious thought to the fact that there is a decided difference between an organization controlling many theatres where the organization itself actually owns all of the theatres and an attempt to formulate a similar buying power wherein the theatres are owned by many individuals and a politically inclined leader wishes to take charge of the destiny of these individual theatres by controlling the one thing which means life or death, which is play dates.

"Odd as it may seem, I feel that the Milwaukee commotion actually helped the Big Three more than anyone else. I have been through many conventions where there has been much yelling about rally to the support of the independents. Always it has evolved that following the convention the theatre owners went back to their brick and mortar in which their money was tied up and proceeded promptly to wire, telephone or personally visit the sales organizations of the muchly-cussed dominant producers for the purpose of securing the product of the big companies before their competitors might tie it up.

"Today more than ever before this business has resolved itself down to a question of making good entertainment and selling it intelligently. Today the selling element has an added angle in that the public must be sold and consequently the producer willing and able to back up quality product with good selling to the public naturally has an edge in the matter of interesting the theatre owner.

"Just pictures will not make any theatre owner a fortune today. He must have good pictures and he must sell them intelligently. The fact that his pictures are made by an independent or by a so-called trust company means nothing to the public. The guy whose quarters make the cash register happy is only concerned with the one element of good entertainment and today the theatre owner knows that so well that he is not concerned so much with buying film because he can get it cheap, as he is with getting good pictures, because they will attract the crowds. Cheaply bought films that cannot attract are in the long run much more costly than expensively bought films properly advertised. Films with good advertising possibilities prove a sufficient magnet to the public to bring in enough dollars to not only pay the expensive cost but show a handsome profit besides.

"When all is said and done, have we any honest-to-goodness independents? If so, who, where and why?"

Educational's Announcement

SHORT subjects are very much to the fore these days. In Europe they are growing faster in popularity than any other kind of entertainment; in this country the proper exploitation of them by the exhibitor—that is the recognition, at last, that when they are the true features of the program they should be truly featured in his advertising, in fact placing them in their proper place in the show world. The shortening of the long subjects—the elimination generally of mere padding—has helped to an extent.

When people go to the theatre as often as they do to see motion pictures, diversified entertainment is the one sound policy of the showman. There is no question about that.

The advance of the briefer feature is well indicated in the announcement of Educational Pictures, by far the largest and most important of the company's six years of seasonal programs. Seventy two-reel comedies are listed, featuring Lupino Lane, an international favorite, and such well-known names as Walter Hiers, Bobby Vernon, Lloyd Hamilton, Neal Burns, Jimmie Adams, Billy Dooley, Lige Conley, Vera Steadman and others; six of these two-reel subjects are juvenile comedies. There are twenty-four of the Cameo one-reel comedies; twelve novelties from the interesting workshop of Lyman H. Howe; twenty-six of the unusually popular Felix The Cat subjects; and Kinograms, whose list of houses has practically doubled within the last two years.

In all, one hundred and thirty-two subjects are offered. It is an ambitious and well arranged program.

Hot Weather Idea

HUGO REISENFELD announces an interesting innovation at the Rivoli Theatre beginning at once. At approximately 6 o'clock every evening there will be a short intermission, and ushers will serve ice water to all the patrons. Immediately after, Frank Stewart Adams, organist, will render a solo at the Wurlitzer for about three minutes. Following which the regular show will continue. This is to be a regular feature of the Rivoli program for an indefinite period.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

OH, KIVALINA

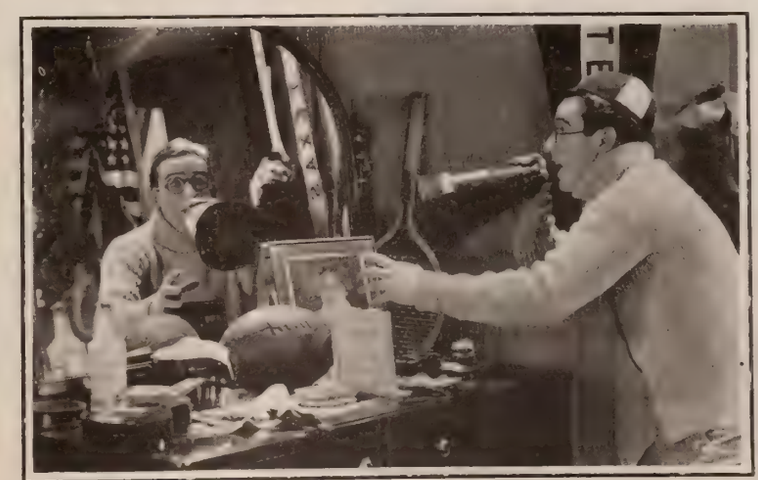
STRAIGHT from the Arctic comes Kivalina—who while not as vivid a figure as Nanook, is nevertheless welcome as a new screen personality. One thing about her—she is natural. She patiently sits in the igloo awaiting the return of her lover, a mighty hunter—who must bring back some fifty fat seals and a silver fox before the medicine man will permit him to marry her. You see the young man's father died owing the m. m. a heavy debt. Thus is the heart interest story woven into this pictorial and enlightening account of Eskimo life.

Earl Rossman is the sponsor. He left civilization two years ago to collect vistas of the far frozen North—and to give us a further education in the habits and customs of the Eskimos. What we glean from it all is the tremendous will to live—the first instinct of self-preservation. These hardy people are eternally in conflict with the elements. They must endure terrific hardships and privations to find shelter and food. They accept their burden with stoic abandon.

The picture carries a variety of appeal. There are the natural color shots of the Northern Lights—there is a reindeer race, a shot of a caribou being skinned, a snow house being erected in jig-time, and several scenes devoted to the spearing of seals and walruses. The camera has been apparently set up on dangerous ice floes—an dshows painstaking effort on Rossman's part to record life in the raw bleak wastes.

The film captures the imagination not only through the play of Nature's elements, but in the theme of self-preservation so courageously carried out by the Eskimos. The pictorial values are immense, though occasionally the leaden skies blend too perfectly with the white frozen sea—lending gray tints which stagger you with the vastness—the overwhelming silence and isolation of it all.

We would play this picture. It is a novelty. It is something off the beaten track. And it records stark, moving drama. Besides, the bleak chilly atmosphere, which covers it, seems to radiate all around you—making you feel cooler and more comfortable during these dog days.



Hail to Rossman and his realistic reels.

The "Peter Pan" girl, Betty Bronson, is seen in this quaint costume in "Not So Long Ago" (Paramount). Quite a difference in her role in this latest production.

Doreen Turner, Pete the dog, and Arthur Trimble who play in Universal's comedy releases evidently believe in a noisy 'Fourth'.

Rah! Rah! Sis Boom Bah—"Freshman" "Freshman"——this by way of introducing Harold Lloyd's latest and last Pathe release which, using our imagination, is what Harold is shouting through the megaphone.

Ruth Taylor, the Mack Sennett player in Pathe releases, hereby serves pictorial notice that the Fourth of July is at hand. Ruth plays leads opposite Harry Langdon and Ralph Graves.

We present the latest Marshal Neilan "discovery" Sally O'Neil, the young lady pictured above as a farmerette. Sally is appearing in "Mike" and "Don't" two Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions.

Arthur Somers Roche, famous novelist, who has just signed a contract with Warner Bros. for all his works.

Undersheriff Eugene W. Biscailus of Los Angeles presents Harold Lloyd with the solid gold trophy won by the comedian's display in the recent Shriners' Electrical Pageant in Los Angeles.

THROWING A PARTY

THE studio associates of Irving Thalberg, associate executive at the M-G-M studio, threw him a surprise party last Friday. He has been convalescing from an attack of influenza, so his friends decided to cheer him up. Louis B. Mayer, production executive, Harry Rapf, associate executive, Edward Mannix, studio manager, Marshall Neilan, Monta Bell, Jack Conway, Pete Smith and Joe Cohen were among the party—not forgetting Mickey Neilan's orchestra.

Everyone registered enthusiasm and good humor. The next day Thalberg left for Coronado where under the instructions of the doctor he must play golf for a week before resuming his duties at Culver City.

WANTED—LEADING LADY

DOUGLAS MacLEAN is not burning up the want ad departments of the newspapers in quest of a leading lady. He is not going about it that way. He simply states through his exploiteers that he wants to get busy immediately on his new picture and that a leading woman is as essential to the production as a camera. But she must be pretty—and she must have ability. She may be blonde or brunette, medium height or petite, slim or pleasingly plump. At present MacLean is looking over screen tests of eligible young actresses. Unlike Harold Lloyd who retains the same leading woman for several successive pictures, the new Paramount star is a believer in variety. Marjorie Daw, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lillian Rich and Anne Cornwall have supported him on past occasions.

Theda Bara, star of Chadwick's "The Unchastened Woman" with the F. B. O. Studios' Float which was one of the features of the recent Shriners' parade in Los Angeles. "The Unchastened Woman" was made at the F. B. O. studios.

REAL HORSE FLESH

JOHN FORD surely gathered together the fastest bunch of actors ever grouped before a camera when he corraled Man O' War, Fair Play, Negofol, The Finn and Morvich for the Blue Grass romance, "Kentucky Pride." There's real horse flesh for you. They've thrilled thousands. They've brought prosperity to more than one bookie—and more than one race-track follower. And in this picture they should bring prosperity to exhibitors—for great things are being said about it.

It isn't exactly Man O' War's screen debut, nor Morvich's either. Both have been caught rarin' to go by news cameramen. Perhaps of all the steppers Man O' War is the easiest to photograph. He enjoys publicity. He's a publicity hound you might say—and loves to bask in the spotlight. They call him "Red" down there on the stud farm—and he saw "red" until he sensed the fact that he was being photographed. The great stepper's dad, Fair Play, beamed with pride in watching him take his scenes.

As for Negofol he took a great shine to George Schneiderman, the head cameraman. He followed George all around the lot evidently seeking introduction to more American dams. He is French—is Negofol and won the French Derby not so long ago. He seems to have a particularly winning way with American ladies for his colts by American dams have done especially well on the track.

As for Morvich he has become the most temperamental of the bunch. He wouldn't register a single emotion until Schneiderman was gone. The photographer had walked out on him in disgust. But when Jack Ford walked over Morvich knew that here was a man who had known and directed horses—even an Iron Horse—so he did his stuff.

"Husky" Hanes, recently made a member of the "Our Gang" troupe, getting some down-on-the-farm 'dope' from Lucien Littlefield. The "Husky" one will henceforth be seen in the "Our Gang" two-reelers released by Pathe.

CHAPLIN GETS 'EM

HOLLYWOOD'S acting fraternity swears allegiance to Chaplin. When the comedian has a premiere no one takes the event lightly. It is a serious matter for all the players.

Harry Carey is perhaps the only actor in Hollywood who had never been inside Sid Grauman's Egyptian Theatre—that is, he was, until the premiere of Chaplin in "The Gold Rush." Between making pictures and attending to his new trading post, Carey rarely has time to go to the theatre. When there is some particular picture he wants to see he has a print shipped out to his ranch at Saugus, California, and shows it in his own little theatre. But the premiere of "The Gold Rush" proved too great an inducement and with his wife and youngster he made the forty-mile pilgrimage from his ranch to attend the opening. "I wouldn't miss the premiere of a new Chaplin picture, if I had to walk the whole distance," was the way Carey explained his presence. All of which sort of proves how the people within the industry regard the Comedy King.

WELCOME HOME

AMONG the passengers who will step down the gangplank of the Berengaria when the big Cunarder docks this Friday is Colleen Moore. The F. N. star has completed the filming of the major portion of the London scenes for "We Moderns," an adaptation of Israel Zangwill's stage play.

Reports seeping in from the w. k. continent have it that Colleen was feted and dined wherever she visited. Her popularity was appreciated by distinguished notables and exhibitors in Paris, Switzerland, London and Dublin. In the Irish city the police reserves were called out to preserve law and order so great was the frenzy of the mob to welcome her. The Erin exhibitors weren't so slow either. They played "So Big" and "Sally" to tremendous business.

Speaking about the Zangwill story the Moore party captured some typical English atmosphere. All the famous landmarks are in the picture—such as Buckingham Palace, the London residence of the royal family, Westminster Abbey, the House's of Parliament, the Tower of London, Trafalgar Square, the jolly old Strand, and the equally jolly old Picadilly Circus.

Lloyd Bacon, son of the late Frank Bacon. visits the William Fox studios in Hollywood during the making of "Lightnin'" and meets Jay Hunt who plays the role of Lightnin' Bill Jones which immortalized his father. Mr. Bacon claims quite a resemblance between Mr. Hunt and his father.

ON TO ONTARIO

ROXY and his Gang checked out of the Capitol Tuesday night and checked their baggage to points in Ontario. The well known broadcasters are off on a three weeks' tour of the Canadian Province as guests of the Ontario government. The visit of the Gang in Canada will be two-fold and is one of the most ambitious undertakings of its kind ever conducted by the Province. Under the auspices of the Province of Ontario Pictures, of which G. E. Patton is the Director, the Ontario government will make a series of twelve motion pictures centering about the legends and traditions of Canada and picturing many of the natural scenic beauties and historic spots of the Province. The three weeks' tour will include visits to Toronto, Ottawa, Muskoka Lakes, Lake of Bays and Nipigon.

The second feature of the trip will be the broadcasting programs of Roxy and the Gang from Toronto. These will take place on Sunday evenings and will be relayed by W. E. A. F.

We would add a third feature of the trip. It will further cement the friendly relations of the United States and Canada. Roxy can compose a new march entitled "Hands Across the Border."

QUITE A CROWD

ALMOST as many soldiers as fought under Washington have been called to arms by General King Vidor while he produces "The Big Parade." The generalissimo is now at Fort Sam Houston at San Ton' and over 7,500 men have enlisted under his command. That there will be real war atmosphere you can judge for yourself since these men are regular soldiers of the U. S. A. They will bring 350 trucks and numerous units of field artillery and tanks into action for the action.

"And he learned about make-up from her" to paraphrase the poet, is our suggestion for a caption for the above off-stage photo showing Conway Tearle looking on as Aileen Pringle makes up for the role of Zara in "The Mystic" (Metro-Goldwyn).

HOW COME?

ACCORDING to Commissioner Courtland Starnes of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police the famous slogan of the Mounted —"Get Your Man!"—is the bunk insofar as it concerns his men. The commissioner stated in Ottawa recently, with reference to an interview of his in New York, when attending the International Police Convention there, that the famous slogan was purely an appellation of the movies. Thus smash goes the popular conception of the "mounted." With romantic license the cinema producer had given the Mounted Police picturesque apparel, customs and duties in their films, he said, with the result that any dapper star who could ride a horse was the ideal to the public.

Pleading the cause of the producers who capitalized the slogan, the Mounted would not be such a heroic body of men as they are if the movies had not glorified them. Through the publicity of the screen story, the R. N. W. M. P. have become famous in every quarter of the globe. They may lead very colorless lives up there in the North country in carrying out the law of the Dominion, but the screen has taken the liberty to write into their lives. And it is romance which colors existence. Honest, persevering men that they are, they could not help being guided to perform their best, if only for the sake of convincing the world that the movie conception is right after all.

All the theatrical and screen types that are concerned with heroics must needs be colored for the sake of dramatic illusion.

Members of the "Winds of Chance" (First National) unit are vaccinated before leaving for location in Canada. From the determined look on Hobart Bosworth's face we surmise that he intends to see that Anna Q. Nilsson gets her share even though he has to use the hook.

Ernest Torrence, featured in Paramount's "The Wanderer" must have some Scotch (no 'bun' intended) in him. Why? Oh, the use of spaghetti for bait instead of the orthodox worm.

Dorothy Revier, one of the featured players in the Columbia production "The Danger Signal."

"You 'gag' me or I'll gag you" — so says Colleen Moore, First National star, to Mervyn LeRoy her official funster and comedy creator. If we were Mervyn we'd deem it a pleasure to be the "gaggee!" Figure it out for yourself.

MARION FAIRFAX REWARDED

MARION FAIRFAX has been rewarded by Richard A. Rowland for her efforts in supervising the Sam Rork screen production of her Broadway play, "The Talker." The genial general manager of F. N. has discovered that Miss Fairfax, as editorial supervisor of the Earl Hudson units, has been working only fourteen hours a day.

"Let me see," says Rowland, "that doesn't take into account the other ten hours."

"Well, I sleep five of those hours," replied the industrious playwright.

"Then you have five hours left," was the retort courteous from Richard A.

"What about it?" inquired Marion.

"Well, well, well, I'll see that you are rewarded," Dick replied, "I'll loan your leisure time to Sam Rork so you can prepare the script for his new production, 'Clothes Make the Pirate.'"

"You know," he continued, "you made such a fine job of adapting, supervising, editing and titling the film, that Sam, Earl Hudson and myself were much impressed and when Sam wanted your services again we just couldn't refuse him."

WITH BUSTER'S BOMBSHELLS

WITH statisticians coming out every little while showing figures that prove this, that or the other thing about the supply and demand and the season's product, it has been left for Buster Keaton to wear his most frozen expression and declare to an anxious public that: 525,345 custard pies were used in the making of comedies during the year 1924, with but two of them good enough to eat—that 1,210 high silk hats were ruined during the making of comedies —of which five were paid for—that 1,765,254,310 comedy scenarios were sent to screen comics of which one was accepted, but not paid for, the company having failed—that 126,798 mothers in Hollywood have daughters who bear striking resemblance to Mary Pickford—of whom more than half are brunettes—that there are 792 comics in moviedom of whom three stated under cross-examination that Charlie Chaplin was good, too—that there are 1,987 philanthropists in California, none of whom sign the actors' checks—that 567,983 mothers in America have sons who look exactly like Jackie Coogan, of whom more than three-quarters have yet to show their first tooth.

ANOTHER BARRIE FOR BETTY

SINCE Betty Bronson climbed into the spotlight of fame and popularity in a Barrie play, "Peter Pan," it is only natural that she should return to another product from the pen of Sir James. Catching all the Barriesque moods in her debut as the Peter of Never-Never Land she reasons it would be just as easy to catch them again in "A Kiss for Cinderella."

A little get-to-gether at the Warner studios. Reading from the left: Maury Paul of the New York American, Syd Chaplin in make-up for "The Man on the Box" (Warner Bros.), Jack L. Warner, production manager, Louella O. Parsons, M. P. editor, N. Y. American, Ernst Lubitsch, director, "Chuck" Reisner, director and Ben Gray.

Louise Fazenda, one of the screen's best comediennes now playing in Warner Bros. productions, poses with Pal, Warner Bros. dog actor, in between scenes of her latest picture.

The "Laurel" of "Stella Dallas" will be played by Lois Moran who was snapped in a pensive mood. "Stella Dallas" is a Samuel Goldwyn-Henry King production.

Ben Lyon 'tuning up' for "The Pace That Thrills" (First National). The story is from the pen of Byron Morgan.

Deal Is On For Sale of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

First National and Fox Are Chief Bidders

ANNOUNCEMENT of the biggest theatre deal in film history is expected momentarily. Control of West Coast Theatres, Inc., operating 110 houses on the Pacific Coast, will be acquired by one of the big concerns in the industry.

The deal is now being negotiated. It can be authoritatively stated that the purchaser will not be Famous Players-Lasky. The best information obtainable is that it will be either Fox Film Corporation or First National.

Motion Picture News learned this week that no less than six picture companies have made offers for the chain within recent weeks. In addition, certain vaudeville interests entered the bidding.

According to reliable informatin, Sol Lesser, the leading factor in West Coast, will dispose of his holdings, and it appears probable that the Gore Brothers will join him in selling. It is possible that Adolph Ramish, the other factor in West Coast, may not sell. Mr. Ramish and A. L. Gore arrived in New York this week. Mr. Lesser has been here for several weeks. A. C. Blumenthal, prominent Coast real estate man, is also here.

In connection with the West Coast deal, Paramount's recent California activities attracted attention. It became known this week that Famous has acquired the Rothchild interests in the big first-run houses in San Francisco—the California, Granada, Imperial, and Portola, in which Famous Players had had a substantial interest for years.

Observers pointed out that the Paramount action was probably directly influenced by the impending sale of the West Coast chain to another producer-distributor and could be figured as a counter-move to strengthen its position in the Far West.

All the indications are that Sol Lesser is retiring from the theatre field to devote himself entirely to production and distribution. He is, of course, an important factor in First National and has large state rights interests.

With the acquisition of the West Coast chain, Fox, already a large operator of theatres, would advance to a still more important position position and would become, without doubt, the outstanding theatre operator on the Coast. Information that Fox is probably to acquire the chain will come as a surprise to most persons in the industry. The company had not been mentioned at all in reports concerning the sale of the West Coast circuit.

West Coast Theatre, Inc., is now engaged upon a big building program. Two houses have recently been completed in San Bernardino and Long Beach, and announcewas made this week of a $500,000 project for Fresno. Sites for the latter house are being investigated. Other theatres are under way.

In the space of a few years Sol Lesser and his associates built up their theatre interests until they came to be universally regarded in the industry as the foremost in the Far West.

While the news of the West Coast deal overshadowed all other events on the theatre checkerboard this week, other developments were reported. It was learned in Baltimore that Marcus Loew will build a theatre there, to seat 4,000 as soon as he succeeds in obtaining the desired site. For a number of years, Loew operated the Hippodrome theatre, which is now run by Keith.

Still another deal of importance was reported from California. Two theatres conducted by Ackerman & Harris have been purchased by the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corporation, through the East Bay Theatre Company, a subsidiary. In the transaction, including long term leases, the amount involved will exceed $850,000. A new theatre under construction at Hayward, and the Palace, recently completed at San Leandro, were the two purchased.

Stanley Co. Active In East

In the East, the Stanley Company of America purchased a plot of ground at Atlantic and Missouri avenues, Atlantic City for a recorded price of $500,000. Plans are being drawn for a million dollar theatre.

Chain expansion in New York State continues. The Schine Circuit is the largest, numbering some 65 houses. William Smalley has fifteen or sixteen theatres. The latest chain acquisitions were made by James Rose, who has taken over the King theatre in Troy, which has long been operated by Benjamin Apple. Mr. Rose will take over a house in Victory Mills on September 1, and in addition to houses which he is operating in Troy, Rensselaer and Kinderhook, he also has one in Nassau.

Fred M. Zimmerman, presrident of Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., announces that his company has taken over the operation of the Scenic and Allen theatres in Medina, N. Y. These two motion picture houses have been operated for a decade or so by Sidney C. Allen, one of the most widely known exhibitors in the Buffalo territory. The company recently acquired the Family theatre in LeRoy, N. Y. and a house in Brockport and has also leased the new Lafayette theatre, soon to open in Batavia.

Rochester House Changes Hands

The Victoria theatre, Clinton avenue south, Rochester, has been sold by the Auditorium theatre company to Herbert C. Kelly, treasurer of the Rochester Theatre company, which has leased and operated the theatre for about thirteen years. The price involved is reported to be more than $500,000. The announcement of the sale was made by Frederick W. Coit, attorney, and president of the Auditorium company, who acted as agent in the transaction. The other officers of the company are in California.

Mr. Kelly, who was represented in the deal by C. C. Davy, of the East Side Savings Bank, has taken title to the property and will continue to operate it. The lease of the Rocehster Theatre company would expire in March, 1927, but it will be renewed at expiration. John J. Farren who has managed the theatre for many years, will continue as manager.

A company known as William M. Shirley Enterprises, Inc., has been formed in Schenectady with offices in the Strand theatre building and which has resulted in rumors being circulated to the effect that Mr. Shirley intends to re-enter some phase of the business. Mr. Shirley sold out his holdings recently in the Farash Theatre company to W. W. Farley, and it was understood at that time that while he would continue to reside in Schenectady, that he would probably enter some other line of business.

Lesser to Produce for United Artists

UNITED ARTISTS will release Sol Lesser's production of "The Winning of Barbara Worth," from the Harold Bell Wright novel, according to an announcement made by Hiram Abrams. Lesser expects to start production around the first of August. Lesser estimates the prodduction will cost not less than $500,000.

The exact locations called for in the book will be used in the production of the story, which is said to be the author's favorite work. Wright has agreed to work with Lesser in the preparation of his story for the screen.

Ask Injunction On Connecticut Tax

Appeal to Restrain State From Collecting License Imposed by New Law Will Be Heard Next Week

A SENSATIONAL development in the Connecticut tax situation occurred this week when, according to newspaper dispatches from Hartford, members of the Hays organization decided to withdraw from the picture field in that state if the new tax law is declared constitutional.

B. M. Holden, attorney for the Hays organization at Hartford, was quoted by the Associated Press as having stated that this decision was reached at a meeting in New York on Tuesday.

No comment was available at the Hays office in New York when Motion Picture News went to press.

The constitutionality of the law will be determined by a court of three federal judges at New Haven on July 10th. Judge Henry Wade Rogers of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals will preside and the other judges will be Henry Goddard and Thomas Thatcher of New York.

A brilliant array of attorneys has been engaged by the Hays organization and the picture interests in Connecticut to properly present the petition.

The new law which became effective July 1st makes it necessary to register every picture coming into the state and to pay a tax of $10 on every reel of 1,000 feet or less and an additional tax of 50 cents on each hundred feet of film in excess of 1,000 feet on each reel.

The bill, presented by Representative Parson of North Canaan, was signed by Governor Trumbull last week and became effective July 1st. It aroused a storm of protest from distributors and exhibitors alike, with the result that immediate action was taken to temporarily restrain the state from collecting the tax.

The Connecticut interests retained Attorneys Lucius Robinson and Ben Holden of Hartford, and the Hays organization engaged Ex-Attorney-General George W. Wickersham and Edwin P. Grosvenor of the firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham and Taft, 40 Wall Street, New York City, to arrange the necessary details seeking the temporary injunction.

The complaint to be submitted to the judges will charge that the tax is confiscatory, that it violates interstate commerce and that the censorship features are illegal in that the right of appeal is not embodied in the measure.

The new law gives Tax Commissioner Blodgett of Connecticut supreme power in the matter of censorship of pictures. It even goes to the extent of permitting him to retain the license fee in the event he deems the picture or any part of it improper for showing in the state of Connecticut.

According to the terms of the law no picture can be shown in the state without first having been registered and the tax paid.

It provides that the tax commissioner may appoint an agent who shall perform the duties of the commissioner as required by the provisions of the bill and that the agent's compensation shall be not more than $4,500 a year. In addition it provides for all necessary assistants whose salaries shall be fixed by the state Board of Finance.

The commissioner has the right to revoke films he deems immoral or of a character to offend racial or religious sensibilities or any element of society, and to retain the tax paid.

The penalty for delivering film without first registering it and paying the tax called for is a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment of not more than sixty days, or both. The offender also forfeits the right to operate a moving picture machine for a period not exceeding six months.

A penalty is also provided for an exhibitor showing a picture not registered or on which the tax is not paid. The punishment is $100 or imprisonment of not more than thirty days, or both.

News reels are exempt, according to the conditions of the new law. Among other exemptions also, are reels of a stictly scientific character and intended for the use of learned professions, also for promotion of educational, charitable, religious and patriotic purposes.

Warners Lease Orpheum in Chicago

AARON JONES, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, states that his company has leased the Orpheum Theatre on State Street, near the corner of Monroe Street, Chicago, to Warner Brothers, for a period of eleven years, from November 1st, 1925.

The Orpheum Theatre is an eight hundred seat house which, for many years, has been operated by Jones, Linick & Schaefer under a pre-release and long run policy, and gives Warner Brothers the loop outlet in Chicago, as forecast in Motion Picture News recently.

Report Greime is Forming Seattle Booking Group

Reports received in Seattle last week indicated that Charles Greime, owner and manager of the Ivan L Theatre in Blaine, was at the present time organizing a circuit of theatres among the smaller towns in his neighboring territory.

Ice Plants Boost Summer Attendance

Harold B. Frankin Says Artificial Cooling Makes Hot-Weather Jinx a Thing of the Past

THAT the summer slump which hitherto has devastated the box office returns of motion picture theatres has been banished by the introduction of efficient cooling plants is the assertion of Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre division, in an article in which he discusses the results obtained in Paramount houses which have been equipped with artificial cooling apparatus.

"There is no box office problem in theatres that are equipped in this way," he says. "The success of a recent installation of weather conditioning apparatus in the Rivoli shows clearly that summer can be banished insofar as the box office is concerned. Similar apparatus is now in operation at the Missouri, St. Louis, Metropolitan, Los Angeles, and Palace, Dallas.

"It is the opinion of the writer that within five years, no important theatre will operate without some apparatus that actually provides such seasonal comfort for its patrons. Such theatres will look forward to the summer months, and because of the air conditioning machinery will bring about, they will attract a new patronage to motion pictures, through the relief they offer from uncomfortable weather.

"Modern engineering has made possible the manufacture of ideal weather under scientific conditions. For over three years Famous Players have assigned engineers to study the problem. After much research and experimentation, these engineers have contributed towards the perfection of apparatus that actually manufactures weather. Mere refrigeration was not a difficult problem—the real problem was to eliminate the damp atmosphere brought about through refrigeration, and success was finally achieved in the air conditioning apparatus installed in the Rivoli, New York, and the other theaters mentioned above, where the air is never over 70 degrees and is yet sweet and dry. This apparatus will prove a great boom to exhibitors everywhere.

"The greater showmanship of the future will demand a theater that is really cool during the summer. The sign in the ads will read, 'Twenty-five and thirty degrees cooler inside,' and the signs will be backed up by facts, and not wishes!

"There will be no summer slump!"

Tiffany Casting "Souls for Sables"

Among the several well known players who have been cast for "Souls for Sables," a forthcoming Tiffany production based on David Graham Phillips' novel "Garland & Co," are Eugene O'Brien, Ethel Clayton, Anders Randolph, George Fawcett and Taylor Holmes.

Grand Canyon Locale for DeMille Production

Cecil B. De Mille has added William Boyd to the cast he will direct in "The Road to Yesterday," the opening scenes of which are to be produced at Grand Canyon. Besides Mr. Boyd, those who have been engaged for the picture, which Producers Distributing Corp. will release, are Jetta Goudal, Joseph Schildkraut, Vera Reynolds and Julia Faye.

Jersey Theatre Owners to Try Regional Movie Season

M.P.T.O. of New Jersey Convention at Asbury Park

WITH the same business efficiency that has characterized its transactions in the past, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey's 6th Annual Convention held June 29th-30th and July 1st, at Asbury Park, functioned according to schedule in every detail and can be truthfully stated to be a most successful event.

The business results achieved and the entertainment features, which included a water carnival, vaudeville bill and banquet, met with the complete approval of the three hundred exhibitors and their families who were in attendance.

The election of officers, held Wednesday at the last business session resulted as follows:

President, Joseph M. Seider; Vice Presidents, Charles Hildinger (Southern District), Peter Adams (Northern District); Louis Rosenthal (Essex County), Joseph Bernstein (Hudson County); Secretary, Leon Rosenblatt; Treasurer, William Keegan; Directors, W. C. Hunt (three years), Leo Juskowitz (three years), I. A. Roth (three years), Jacob Fox (one year—to fill vacancy), and Harry P. Nelson (one year).

The outstanding bit of action taken was the rejection of the National Movie Season in the form that it had been outlined and the substitution of what has been unofficially dubbed "Regional Movie Week."

The objection to the regular form of Movie Season procedure was based on the contention of the assembled theatre owners, that the dates in August selected for the National event were unsuitable for many sections of the state.

The entertainment feature of the convention was the banquet, Wednesday night, held in the dining room of the Monterey Hotel.

Robert E. Welsh, editor of the Moving Picture World was toastmaster at this function, and the speakers were R. F. Woodhull, National, M. P. T. O. A. president, Joseph M. Seider, New Jersey, President: Senator Edward I. Edwards; Governor Silzer of New Jersey and Ray Lewis, editor of the Spot-Light.

The first business session of the convention was called to order by President Joseph M. Seider Monday afternoon promptly on schedule. The period was devoted very largely to the submission of reports and the delivery of speeches by notables both in and outside the industry. Among the speakers were National M. P. T. O. A. President R. F. Woodhull, ex-president Sydney S. Cohen and Frederick W. Elliot, newly chosen general manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association. President Woodhull, who was enthusiastically welcomed by his home state brother exhibitors, said among other things of interest that the "hold your play dates" idea originated at Milwaukee has become more than a slogan and that the plans formulated promise to be entirely successful and practical. Continuing on the subject of play dates Mr. Woodhull made some important explanations.

"It has never been the intention of your National President or the National Board of Directors," he said, "to advise any theatre owner to stop buying pictures from any particular concern. We have simply emphasized the thought that you do not buy yourself into a position where your play dates are entirely consumed by two or three producers and distributors. We have also suggested that you review the entire market carefully before buying your next season's product, not making the idiotic mistake of forgetting the Independent exchanges and purchasing the very best and wholesome pictures for retailing at your theatre."

Some idea of what the national organization is expecting from the Independent product available in the near future was indicated by the speaker's direct reference to the Independent market. "I have, with the best care within my limited powers of discernment, scanned this vast list of prospective product and cannot help but once more reiterate the advice to look over the Independent market before making your Fall purchases," he said.

Announcement was made to the Jersey Convention concerning the newly-organized department of the M. P. T. O. A., the fair play bureau. Concerning this bureau Mr. Woodhull had the following to say:

"After watching its activities during its short existence, I can truthfully say to you that it is the most constructive move that I have observed during my several years of organization activity. Its purpose is very plain, its intentions honest, and its name most appropriate. You will discover its usefulness the very first time you have any difficulty in securing product or being compelled to buy blocs of pictures or pay exorbitant film rentals, providing you bring such troubles to the attention of your fair play bureau. In the several disputes settled so far we have found all the home offices ready and anxious to straighten out any trouble existing between exhibitors and branch managers who are over zealous or who do not feel they have the power to make reductions without the approval of the executives."

Toward the close of his address the president gave the Jersey M. P. T. O. what might easily be accepted as sound advice when he said: "Based upon observations of other state organizations, I desire to inject this, perhaps intruding, advice to your excellent association; stop helping exhibitors in arbitration and other difficulties who do not and will not contribute of their time and money to your organization. There have been several cases in this state in the past year that have resulted, through the efforts of this human dynamo that you are fortunate to have for your President, Joseph Seider, in the saving of hundreds of dollars to certain theatre owners who upon inquiry I find did not even pay the small dues requested, or by looking around I do not even see them here helping you to solve the problems common to us all. This is personal advice, not national intrusion, and comes only from one who served as your state president for three years and endeavored to make good organization material out of men of this calibre by using Joe's formula of 'killing them with kindness.'"

Ex-President Cohen spoke briefly using as his subject the efficiency of the Jersey organization and the tendency to overbuild theatres in various cities and towns of the United States.

He pointed out that overseating was a real menace and expressed fears that great harm might come from it unless some means of combating the evil was not found soon.

A short address of welcome was delivered by Mayor Hetrick of Asbury Park. His Honor, in the course of his remarks was caustic in his condemnation of the so-called Jersey blue laws which among other things prohibit the showing of motion pictures on Sunday and advised the assembled theatre owners to wage a constructive legislative campaign at Trenton until the obsolete statutes are repealed.

Mr. Elliott's address referred to the program of the Independent Association in connection with the Play Date "Bureau" established by the M. P. T. O. A. He stated that he brought a pledge for "better pictures, so that those theatres who support our members will have an equal chance with the 'million-dollar' bally-hoo subjects of opposition.

Closer co-operation between producers and distributors, distributors and exchanges, exchanges and theatres.

Improved service.

Conciliation instead of contention.

Modern business methods, eliminating extravagance and waste motion.

Protective Legislation and public support."

President Seider's report reviewed the accomplishments of the organization for the year and was unanimously accepted.

Mr. Seider stated that the state could boast a 98% membership but that he would be modest—and only call it 94%.

In connection with the constructive work done during the year, Mr. Seider spoke as follows:

"We interceded with the Operators' Union in behalf of the Essex County Theatre Owners with a nominal measure of success.

"But, as a result we organized these theatre owners into a branch of this organization, known as the Essex County Unit. We installed their officers, presented a gavel to their efficient and energetic President, Louis Rosenthal, and although we did not interfere with their local efforts, at the slightest sign of need we extended the helping hand and cumulative strength of the entire State organization.

"We retained on a yearly basis for the protection of our members in a legal way Attorneys Joseph Varbalow of Camden, N. J., and Norman Samuelson of New York, N. Y.

"We have kept our members advised as to changes in the Uniform Contract.

"We brought about the elimination of the duplication of dues and organization membership has been worked out.

"We stepped in and took hold of the Music Tax tangle and adjusted some forty odd cases.

"There is a good possibility of enacting into a law a Daylight Savings Bill, reducing the period two weeks from both ends.

"Your full Board at their individual expense has traveled to Washington on your business. The result was highly satisfactory.

"Our entire legislative activities have resulted in our gaining the respect of the Legislators, and in other ways we are making progress.

"We have instituted campaigns for the reduction of Basic Rates in Insurance and Electric Current and refunds of overcharge on electric current charge since 1914."

The report of Sidney S. Samuelson, chairman of the board of directors was read and accepted at this first session also.

Mr. Samuelson's report said in part:

"Your board met twelve times in accordance with recommendation submitted by our President and adopted by our Board of Directors at its first meeting as follows: July, New York, as guests of J. M. Seider; August, Atlantic City; September, Toms River, as guests of I. M. Hirshblond; October, Salem, as guests of Arthur B. Smith; November, Newark, as guests of the Essex County Unit of the Motion Picture Theatres of New Jersey; December, Trenton, as guests of Charles Hildinger and William Keegan; January, Paterson, as guests of Peter Adams; February, Camden, as guests of Benjamin Schindler; March, Newton, as guests of Sidney E. Samuelson; April, Jersey City, as guests of Leon Rosenblatt; May, Asbury Park, as guests of the New Monterey Hotel; June, Asbury Park.

Several changes in the composition of the Board have taken place since the convention at Asbury Park last year. At that time the following directors were elected to serve one year; Juskowitz, Hirshblond, and Fabian, to serve for two years; Smith, Schindler and Rosenthal to serve for three years; Woodhull, Hennessey and Samulson. Mr. Hennessey resigned and the board of Directors made the following changes in accepting the resignation. Schindler was elected to fill Hennessey's unexpired term; and W. C. Hunt was elected to serve until this convention. After several meetings non-attendance, Mr. Fabian was dropped and Leon Rosenblatt was elected to serve until this convention.

Later in the year Arthur Smith retired from the business when he leased his theatre and he promptly tendered his resignation. In view of Arthur's past activities and loyalty and in the hope that he would re-enter the business the Board of Directors deferred on his resignation until this convention.

The Tuesday morning session of the convention was executive. It was at this meeting that the action relative to the National Movie Week program was agreed upon by a long roll call of the theatre owners present.

This was made official by resolution Wednesday.

At Tuesday afternoon's meeting Leon Rosenblatt submitted his report as chairman of a committee on arbitration.

The report stated in part, that the committee was "definitely opposed to the present system", meaning that the rules in vogue and an alleged handicap of provisions of the standard contract made the operation of the board unsatisfactory to them.

Reference to a new form of standard contract being prepared by Nathan Burkon, was made but official news as to its contents was denied on the ground that it had not as yet been submitted.

Colby Harriman addressed the convention on presentation as applied to the smaller theatres.

M. J. O'Toole, ex-national president was present Tuesday afternoon, as well as a number of other New York notables.

The last business meeting of the convention was held Wednesday morning.

The matter of dues came up at this time and were finally fixed at 5 cents per seat for each theatre.

The report of Norman Samuelson, attorney for the Jersey theatre owners, in connection with arbitration was read and accepted. Mr. Samuelson e pressed views similar to those related above in connection with arbitration as applied at present and for the same reasons.

He was followed by Sol Raives, chairman of the Arbitration Board of New York, who defended the operation and expressed the belief that it is functioning satisfactorily, all things considered.

Officers of the Jersey Board presented Joseph M. Seider, president, with a diamond ring in token of their appreciation for his work on behalf of the organization.

A resolution expressing thanks to the trade press for cooperation was adopted and a rising vote of thanks to Henry P. Nelson, the retiring secretary of the theatre owners.

Big Theatre Deal Pending in Chicago

NEGOTIATIONS are in progress between Lubliner & Trinz and Lynch Theatres, Inc., whereby the former will secure an interest in the theatres operated by the Lynch circuit.

The houses involved are all located in Chicago and include the Manor, 2,000 seats; New Tiffin, 2,300 seats; Crystal, 1,900 seats; and others.

Balaban & Katz recently secured an interest in Lubliner & Trinz and there is considerable speculation as to the booking arrangement for Lynch Theatres, Inc., if the pending deal is consummated. Reports of the negotiations which were current in Chicago this week, are thought to have had something to do with the sharp rise in Balaban & Katz stock.

Strand Interests to Build New $100,000 Albany Theatre

Y.

The theatre will be located in the business center of the city and upon the present site of what is known as the Old Municipal Building.

American Film Exports Reach New High Mark

$75,000,000 Year, Says Wall Street Journal

EXPORTS of American films to foreign countries will make a new record this year, according to The Wall Street Journal, recognized financial authority, which recently printed an article containing interesting figures on the export trade. The total value of American film export business this year is estimated at $75,000,000, according to the Journal.

"Export of American film in 1925 will reach the highest point in history," says the article. "Famous Players-Lasky Corp. export business is running around $1,000,000 a month or at the rate of $12,000,000 a year. This is 25 per cent over the 1923 period and more than double the exports in 1921 which showed a large increase over exports in the preceding years. First National did over $6,000,000 exports last year. Export business is now larger than total domestic business was only a few years ago."

"Originally, profits from films sold abroad were regarded as a sort of side line, a picture was supposed to pay for itself from exhibition in the United States and any profit from foreign sales was so much 'gravy'," the article continues. "Today the export business of the largest American producers ranges from 30% to 35% of their total sales volume and cost of pictures is allocated between American and foreign sales.

"The success of American pictures is not based on superior technical skill so much as on the fact that the size of our market enables American producers to spend much more on their pictures and therefore to make them more elaborate and more spectacular than European producers.

"Americans acquired great technical skill during the war and after but German producers are quite as skillful and many German productions are thought to be more artistic than American films. English and French producers as a whole are not as good craftsmen.

"The American producer, however, has the whole of the American market in which to sell his picture and get back his cost and depends on foreign markets for only about 20% of his gross income. Consequently to take a concrete example an American producer can spend $300,000 on a film, while his foreign competitor, not knowing the American temperament and market has only the foreign markets to be certain of and can therefore spend with assurance only a fifth as much, or say $60,000 on his average picture.

Americans Superior Showmen

"In addition to this Americans although perhaps not as artistic as their European rivals, are the greatest showmen in the world and know what appeals to the masses, and can make pictures that bring the money to the box office.

"Moving pictures appeal to the public primarily as an escape from every day life, and the unvarying optimism and ever present happy ending of the American film, together with the luxury and splendor of American studio settings make an all powerful appeal.

"American 'Wild West' films with their rapid action are even more popular on the other side than in this country. An outstanding example was Famous Players-Lasky's 'Covered Wagon' which cost approximately $800,000 and has grossed over $5,000,000, a new high record for film income.

Costly Productions Succeed

"Another important film is the 'Sea Hawk' made by First National from the Sabatini story which cost about $700,000 and will gross about $3,000,000. First National's 'Lost World' also cost about $700,000 and is meeting with remarkable response abroad, especially in England.

"The 'Ten Commandments' also made by Famous Players is the biggest picture ever made for foreign as well as domestic consumption. This remarkable film actually cost $1,800,000 to make largely on account of the elaborate settings and large numbers employed in the cast. This is more than double the cost of any film ever made and predictions were broadcast that it would never bring back to its producers the money spent. Foreign sales alone will more than cover its cost.

"The wide spread popularity of the American film is arousing considerable resentment and alarm among European business men. It is claimed not without justice that films of American life are the most potent advertising for American goods that could be devised. Dandies and belles in Buenos Aires and Calcutta aim to dress like American movie stars and ask and get American merchandise of all kinds to fulfill their ambition. The old saying that 'trade follows the flag' has been superseded by 'trade follows the film.'

Develop Foreign Markets

"All important American producers have an elaborate staff and equipment for handling foreign business. Films to be exported are carefully revamped and retitled by experts in the language of the country of their destination. Any features that might be objectionable are eliminated.

"Famous Players which used to distribute through agents now has its own offices all over the world. Distribution is made in 64 different countries and films are titled in 37 different languages.

"Government figures of film exports show extraordinary gains in exports in 1924 over 1923 and there is every indication that 1925 will show continued increases.

"Department of Commerce figures show 170,347,342 linear feet of positives, valued at $6,181,917 exported last year against 138,656,880 linear feet valued at $5,417,745 in 1923, an increase of nearly 32,000,000 feet. Valuations do not indicate real size of film export business since they represent only the cost of the actual positive prints shipped and not the income from the rentals accruing to the producer.

Big Increase in 1924

"The most notable feature of last year's exports was the increase of exports to Europe to 53,000,000 feet from 29,000,000 feet in 1923. Eleven European countries more than doubled their imports of positives. Great Britain is the largest market for American films in Europe followed by France, Sweden and Germany.

"Exports to Latin America increased from 45,000,000 feet to 47,000,000 in 1924 and the Far East consumed about 45,000,000 feet against 40,000,000 in the preceding year.

"Unusual efforts are being made by American film producers to make 1925 the biggest export year on record and judging by the current volume of the larger companies this goal will be achieved. Export business of the film trade has been rapidly growing in importance until now it is an essential department of the business, responsible for a large part of the profit of producers."

Report of Australia Duty Increase Unfounded

A REPORT, recently current in this country, to the effect that Australia has doubled the duty on importation of foreign films, is declared "unjustified" in a letter to Motion Picture News from the Department of Commerce, signed by C. J. North, Specialties Division. The letter follows:

"A report has been spread about to the effect that Australia has doubled the duty on the importation of foreign motion pictures, the increase being from $30 a reel to $60 a reel. The Department of Commerce, in checking this up through its Trade Commissioner in Melbourne, Australia, has just received a cable stating that this rumor is unjustified. I am still in the dark as to exactly what has happened down there, but it is apparent that no such increase in duty has been given the effect of law, though it is possible that it may have been contemplated."

Eight Perish in Fire and Explosion in Kansas City Theatre

THE Gillis theatre, one of the old landmarks of Kansas City, was destroyed late Thursday night by an explosion and fire which burned an unknown number of persons. Early estimates were that thirty-five persons had perished in the theatre, but that estimate was lowered to seven or eight late the next afternoon. The house was a combination motion picture and tabloid show, located at Fourth and Walnut streets. Scores of persons were injured. The estimated loss was $150,000.

The explosion was followed almost instantly by flames, the roof of the 5-story building tumbling in, leaving the old walls stark and ragged in the firelit sky. It was near 11 o'clock and those who escaped did so miraculously, according to witnesses. The house was equipped with a front and rear exit and a main entrance. The front exit was a circuitous riot. It led from the theatre through a long hall down a flight of steps, a route that in confusion became a puzzle in a maze of steps. Added to the irregular way of the exit was the ever-breaking boards, sending men sprawling pellmell. The rear exit was cut off.

The tragedy came with terrific swiftness. The midnight show was just beginning. A picture was on the screen. Only a comparative few were in the audience, as the stage numbers were not to start until midnight. When the entire section of the theatre collapsed it sent bricks and debris into surrounding streets, breaking windows in buildings as far as a block away. Police and firemen began taking the injured to hospitals, one firemen losing his life. The streets were littered with bleeding and crying men and women. Scores were dragged from the ruins and given emergency treatment. Many persons in restaurants and buildings near the theatre also were injured.

The cause of the explosion remains a mystery, although there is an investigation under way by the police.

Beatty Discusses Jersey's Stand

Director of Greater Movie Campaign Says Exhibitor Organization Does Not Understand Plan

JEROME BEATTY, Director of the Greater Movie Season Campaign, sponsored by the Hays organization, issued a statement on Wednesday regarding the decision of the M.P.T.O. of New Jersey not to participate. Mr. Beatty said:

"I notice that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey have decided not to join in the Greater Movie Season Campaign because they objected to 'paying one per cent of August profits to the Hays office for expense.'

"Evidently the New Jersey exhibitors do not understand the Greater Movie Season plan.

"No money is paid to the Hays office. An exploitation service is given free to those exhibitors who want to use it. It is a plan that has proved that it will increase August business from ten to fifty per cent and its effect is felt in increased business throughout the following months.

"Exhibitors decide what they want to spend on their campaign and spend it. An exhibitor in a small town can put on a Greater Movie Season Campaign for a dollar, by buying ten one-sheets, some slides and a few pennants. In larger cities the exhibitors get together, name a committee of their own to collect whatever they want to spend, and that committee spends it.

"As to the date of starting—there is nothing to prevent exhibitors from opening their Greater Movie Season campaign on September 1st, or on Christmas Day if they choose.

"But unless they join in the national celebration, which is during August, they lose the advantage of the many national tie-ups that will cause the whole country to be talking and thinking about going to see motion pictures during August.

"Last year in the hottest August California has had in a long time, the Greater Movie Season Campaign gave the West Coast Theatres an increase of 20 per cent in profit over the previous August, and the business kept on building. Which would tend to prove that the public was satisfied with the pictures that they saw in second run, as well as first run theatres.

"There can be no 'war' on the Greater Movie Season Campaign. It is an exploitation idea offered to exhibitors. Several thousand theatres already have accepted the idea. We naturally have never expected all exhibitors to adopt it the first year.

"A number of exhibitors in California did not join in the campaign last year. This year they are all in, because they know now that the idea is sound.

"If a distributor offers an exhibitor a press book on a production, and exploitation service that has proved efficient in making that production bring business at the box office, and the exhibitor says he doesn't want that service, that hardly is a declaration of war.

"In offering this practical idea to exhibitors, in making National Tie-ups of great value to all exhibitors, in preparing advertising material and arranging for it to be sold at cost, in furnishing a service so complete that the smallest exhibitor can take advantage of it as well as the largest, we feel that our obligation is ended.

"If a few exhibitors reject it, we can only accept their decision with regret in the knowledge that they are the ones who would profit by it and that certainly the loss is theirs."

Butterworth has increased his theatre interests in Grand Rapids, Michigan, by the purchase of a controlling interest in the Consolidated Theatre Corporation, which owns the Majestic, Orpheum, Strand, Isis and Powers. Whitmore, chairman of the board of Mid-Continent Hotels Corporation, was the toastmaster.

Paul C. Mooney Head of Alliance Producing

PAUL C. MOONEY, former vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, is to head the Alliance Producing Corporation, a company recently organized under the laws of the State of New York. The new company plans to establish a chain of dramatic stock theatres throughout the United States and Canada, produce stage plays, and engage in the production and distribution of motion pictures.

Tentative plans for the formation of several stock theatres during the coming season and for the production of several stage attractions designed for Broadway engagements have already been made, it is announced. The motion picture activities of the organization are still under consideration.

Chicago Pledges $50,000 For Greater Movie Season

Forty-Five Cities Organized for Campaign

WITH an advertising appropriation of $500,000 for its Greater Movie Season campaign, Chicago commands the attention of the entire industry and many commercial associations. That sum, to be expended within a few weeks, establishes a record not only for Motion Picture drives but for general business campaigns as well. Following a stirring address by Barney Balaban, treasurer and chairman of the finance committee, $7,000 was pledged in seven minutes by exhibitors at the general meeting; and according to reports from Chicago $33,000 cash is already in hand.

"I believe the benefits that will come for the next eleven months will greatly overshadow the benefits derived from August alone," Mr. Balaban declared. "This is the first time the small houses will have an opportunity of doing for themselves in institutional advertising what we have done for all our houses."

To be sure that small exhibitors will derive the greatest possible benefit it was agreed to place in all newspaper ads and on all outdoor advertising a caption reading "Attend the Motion Picture Theatre NEAREST Your Home." Assessments were made on the basis of 10 cents a seat for theatres with less than 400 capacity, and 20 cents a seat for theatres of more than 400. Important commercial co-operation has been extended by Chicago Concerns.

The General Outdoor Advertising Company has donated 150 billboards and with what the exchanges will use, the season will have a representation of more than 300 twenty-four sheet stands. The Chicago Gas and Light Company has agreed to insert Greater Movie Season material in all mailing matter, thus reaching more than 3,000,000 homes in Chicago and its vicinity. Five railroads have pledged their support to Ralph Kettering, greater movie season poster general manager of the campaign, by displaying posters at their own expense at all stations within a 200 miles radius.

Dining-car menus and other selling organs distributed by railroads will also carry the message. Every Chicago newspaper has been quick to cooperate already. The motion picture page of the Evening American carries a box, "Where to Go and What to See. Greater Movie Calendar." The American will also distribute free box-office stickers reading, "A Greater Movie Season Theatre."

Minneapolis, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., Seattle, and Tulsa all swung into line this week making a total of forty-five important centers conducting territorial drives that will include several hundred smaller towns.

In Pittsburgh representatives of leading exhibitor and exchange factors have endorsed the campaign and elected the following executive committee: Dennis Harris of Harris-Davis Theatres, Milton Crandall of Rowland and Clark, Louis K. Sidney of Loew's Aldine, J. Galligner of the Cameo, and William Kester, representing the second-run and independent exhibitors.

New Orleans appointed Maurice F. Barr, of the Saenger Amusement Co. general manager of the campaign and an executive committee of B. F. Brennan, Suburban Theatres, Rodney Toups, Loew's Crescent, Marion Ferrara, Trianon Theatre, and A. E. Chadwick, Strand Theatre. The New Orleans season conforming with the national idea, will include a spectacular opening-day parade on August 3rd.

As originator of the successful Northwest Go-to-Movie Week and a stanch advocate of a country-wide drive, William A. Steffes has been the unanimous choice of Minneapolis, Minn., for the general managership there.

According to telegraphic reports from Oklahoma City, George A. McDermit of the Capitol Theatre has been appointed local general manager. Seven other towns will be linked to the campaigns that Oklahoma City and Tulsa will conduct. Ralph Talbert of the Majestic Theatre, has taken charge of Tulsa activities, supported by William M. Smith, Orpheum Theatre, J. W. Clark, Majestic Theatre, W. C. Campbell, Empress and J. Brown, Lyric, who will control publicity; Miss Hazel McCoy of the Strand Theatre, finance; Harry F. Castle, Palace Theatre, F. Johnson, Wonderland Theatre, and Roy Jackson, Cozy Theatre, parades.

Extensive celebrations, embracing both a parade, a movie-ball to which ten stars have been invited, are under way in Seattle. General Manager J. Von Herberg of the Liberty has Robert Bender of the Columbia theatre as Chief Lieutenant and Frank Edwards, of the Wintergarden, as Chairman of the Portland Finance Committee. They have decided upon a campaign along the same lines and negotiations are on to link Spokane into the season.

Exhibitors in Little Rock, Ark., have taken concerted action to put the season across. R. T. Newton, Capitol Theatre, is chairman of the executive board whose members are W. A. May, Royal Theatre, T. W. Sharp, New Theatre, N. J. Prunisky, Princess Theatre, W. M. Reeves, Highland Theatre, and Henry Pipin, Palace Theatre.

In New York City only the announcement of the general manager remains to complete plans that have been discussed at several meetings of nationally known exhibitors. This is expected during the week.

The manner in which independent theatre circuits are adopting the national plan devised by Motion Picture Produceres and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays president, is demonstrated by contacts established directly with the New York service bureau. M. E. Comerford has called on Mr. Hays and promised the complete co-operation of his circuit throughout Northern Pennsylvania. Forty-five houses of the Schine Circuit, operating from Gloversville, N. Y. with Ben Davis as comptroller, will conduct a concerted campaign, as will the fifteen houses of the United Theatre Enterprises, A. B. Hyman, president, whose headquarters are Huntington, W. Va.

Preliminary organization having been accomplished, general managers are now directing their efforts towards Greater Movie Season newspaper contest, that has a trip for two around the world on the Red Star liner Belgenland, and trips for two to Miami and Los Angeles as the national awards. A special press-sheet containing stories, advertisements and illustrations to cover the affair from start to finish, has been issued. A one-sheet for free distribution to newspapers is ready, together with slides, mats and other accessories calculated to generate the maximum public interest.

"What the motion picture means to me" or "What the motion picture means to my community" are the alternative subjects set for three-hundred word essays, from which only professional writers, theatre and newspaper employees and their families have been debarred. Indications are that the list of participative newspapers when complete will prove the most influential yet connected with a motion picture contest.

Up-to-date reports of Greater Movie Season activities throughout the country show forty-five important centers now in full swing. The list together with the general managers controlling operations is as follows:

Albany, N. Y., Tony Veiller; Atlanta, Ga., Willard C. Patterson; Atlantic City, N. J., Edward J. O'Keefe; Boston, Mass., Buddy Stewart; Buffalo, N. Y., Jules Michael; Butte, Mont., William J. Sullivan; Camden, N. J., W. Wilson; Chicago, Ill., Ralph Kettering; Cleveland, Ohio, Fred Desberg; Clinton, Iowa, H. S. Ward; Dallas, Texas, Si Charninsky; Denver, Colo., Harry Long; Des Moines, Iowa, A. G. Stolte; Gloversville, N. Y., Ben Davis; Huntington, W. Va., Jas. T. Dunbar; Hutchinson, Kan., Harry Keefer; Indianapolis, Ind., Ace Berry; Kansas City, Mo., Jay Means; Little Rock, Ark., W. A. May; Los Angeles, Calif., Jack Retlaw; Lexington, Ky., Earle Hall Paine; Memphis, Tenn., Lloyd Dearth; Michigan State, H. M. Richey; City of Detroit, Dave Palfreyman; Milwaukee, Wis., Tom Saxe; Minneapolis, Minn., W. A. Steffes; Montgomery, Ala., H. C. Farley; New Bedford, Mass., Earle D. Wilson; New Haven, Conn., James Powers; New Kensington, Pa., Al Hicks; New Orleans, La., Maurice F. Barr, Oklahoma City, Okla., George A. McDermitt; Omaha, Nebr., C. T. Lynch; Philadelphia, Pa., F. W. Buhler; Pittsburgh, Pa., Milton Crandall; Portland, Ore., To be announced; Portland, Me., C. S. Hamilton; Salt Lake City, Utah, Carl Porter; San Francisco, Cal., Herman Wobber; St. Louis, Mo., Jos. Mogler; Seattle, Wash., J. Von Herberg; Sioux Falls, S. D., A. K. Pay; Tulsa, Okla., Ralph Talbert; Washington, D. C., Harry M. Crandall; Waterloo, Iowa., Alexander Frank; Wichita, Kans., Stanley Chambers.

Campaigns conducted from these centers will be territorial in scope, embracing several hundred smaller towns exclusive of those which are running independent drives.

Banners, pennants and other advertising matter emblazoned with the words "Greater Movie Season" are posted in conspicuous places about the exchanges here. The movement is gaining good impetus following another meeting held at the Victory Theatre. Carl A. Porter, manager of that house, and general committee chairman for the Greater Movie Drive in this portion of the territory, is devoting a great deal of his time to getting the various committees to work and starting the ball rolling for a good send-off to the doings the Middle of July. Lloyd Willis, Hays organization representative working between this city, Denver, and Butte, Montana, will be here this week after getting the showmen in the northern city started on the drive.

Frank Rembusch, newly elected president of the Indiana Exhibitors pledged his support and cooperation to the drive at a banquet which launched the season in Indianapolis. The gathering, presided over by H. C. Dressendorfer, was not confined to exhibitors and film executives but included civic and commercial leaders who showed enthusiastic interest in the movement, the purpose and working of which was outlined by Jerome Beatty, director of Greater Movie Season.

Before more than two hundred guests, Mayor Lew Shank endorsed the drive and announced that he would issue a proclamation calling public attention to Greater Movie Season. That other commercial interests will follow the lead of the Indiana Traction Company in co-operating in advertising and general displays, was assured through the pledge of support given by John B. Reynolds, president of the Chamber of Commerce. Other speakers included Herman Lieber and Ace Berry, of the Circle Theatre, who will direct local activities.

Another important development in the national campaign was the lining up of New England. Under the general managership of Buddy Stewart of the Fenway Theatre, the Boston season will be handled by the following exhibitor-committee:

Victor Morris of the Orpheum; Bart Grady of Keith's Theatre; Al Somerby of the Howard and Bowdoin Square; Stanler Sumner of the Community Theatre, Newton; Chas. Williams of the Franklin Park, Dorchester; C. Harris of the Boston; Jacob Lowrie of the Modern and Beacon; J. Breen Brenan of the State, and George Ramsdell of the Orpheum, Malden.

Portland, Me., elected C. G. Hamilton, manager of Keith's Theatre, general manager of the campaign in that city, and voted funds sufficient to make Portland's drive as vigorous as Boston's.

Indicating the extent to which Greater Movie Season is expected to influence business generally, journals of the drug, jewelry, publishing and retail trades have requested from the national service bureau stories that tell how retailers may cooperate with exhibitors during the August celebration.

From an estimate based on individual campaign appropriations already passed upon by local organizations, it is possible that the national advertising expenditure over and above such donations as $100,000 worth of billboard space by the Poster Advertising Association in convention at Atlantic City, will reach $500,000.

Under the guiding hand of the genial and most capable Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitor League, the Greater Movie Season campaign in the Mound City is swinging along with much momentum and it promises to be the most auspicious event of its kind ever staged in the history of local filmdom.

Last Wednesday at the Melbourne Hotel roof a very enthusiastic meeting was held. His Honor Victor J. Miller, Mayor of St. Louis, was scheduled to be the principal speaker but unfortunately he was forced to go to a local hospital to undergo an operation and could not be at the meeting. So he sent his regrets. However. he is heart and soul in the Greater Movie Season Movement and will lend his aid in every way at his command.

City Court Judge Rosecan was one of the speakers while Director of Public Safety Brod also spoke. Director Brod has direct supervision over the theatres, airdomes and other amusement places of the city. He is 100 per cent for the campaign.

Plans for the Greater Movie Season have been definitely made in Denver and the organization machinery has started. Freeman Talbot, manager of the local KOA Station and well known exploiteer, has been engaged by the Board of Directors of the campaign to take active management of the publicity work. Both the Denver Post and News-Times are reported to be in full support insuring plenty of newspaper publicity. The greater part of the budget has already been collected and campaign material ordered. The local bill posting company has donated a number of their boards. From all appearances, the entire campaign will be a complete success. A parade is being arranged for August 2nd, in which every theatre will have a float containing their respective orchestras.

Mayor John W. Smith of Detroit, during the past week issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the city at large to do everything to make the campaign a success.

Theatres Escape Damage In Quake

Santa Barbara's Three Picture Houses Believed Unharmed—West Coast Co. Reports Granada Withstood Shocks

Los Angeles, June 30.

MOTION picture theatres escaped damage in the Santa Barbara earthquake, according to latest reports from the stricken city. The Granada theatre, owned by West Coast, stood the shocks and was uninjured, while buildings on every side were virtually wrecked.

The Granada is an eighteen hundred seat house and considered the finest structure in town. It is eight stories high and built of steel and reinforced concrete, and located on State Street in the business center. It was in this location that the greatest damage was done.

Directly opposite the Granada was the San Marcos office building, a modern structure, but now a complete ruin. The Arlington Hotel, near the Granada, was nearly demolished and several persons were killed in its collapse. It was a famous hostelry and was hardly ever without a visiting picture company but no picture people are reported to have been in the city at the time of the 'quake and nobody connected with the industry has been reported injured.

Jack Retlaw, exploitation director of West Coast Theatres, said considerable anxiety had been felt for the safety of the Granada and their other two affiliated houses, the California and the Mission. A definite report was received on the Granada that all was well and while no specific news was received on the other two, it appears quite certain that they are uninjured.

C. W. Churchill, manager, and Ed Johnson, director, West Coast houses in Santa Barbara and their families are reported safe.

The news reels were on the job early following the earthquake, and pictures of the disaster were shown as early as Wednesday night in the Broadway houses. Other companies aided in the rescue work.

In answer to an appeal from Mayor Andreas of Santa Barbara for power wagons and powerful lights to aid rescue workers digging through earthquake debris, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, promptly ordered portable studio electric equipment to be rushed to the stricken city. Within ten hours two electric generating plants and fifty one thousand Watt lamps were installed in the ruined area of the city by studio electricians under the direction of James Bardy an electrical engineer in the employ of the film company, which gave illumination for eight blocks where rescue crews were working.

Laura La Plante, Universal Jewel star, and Josie Sedgwick, Universal western star, were among the first members of the Hollywood film colony to start activities in aid of destitute victims of the Santa Barbara earthquake. Their proffers of aid were eagerly accepted by the American Red Cross and by the American Legion.

News weeklies were on the job early and rushed pictures of the disaster to distribution points. Pathe claimed its films were the first to reach Broadway.

As the result of speedy and efficient service on the part of the International Newsreel representatives in Los Angeles and San Francisco, who chartered aeroplanes and flew to the scene of the great Santa Barbara earthquake and back to where their film could be developed and printed, theatres in the West Coast cities showed pictures of the quake destruction as soon as twelve hours after it happened.

The quake negatives also were speeded to Salt Lake City by special airplanes where they caught the East-bound Air Mail to New York.

As soon as word of the Santa Barbara earthquake reached Los Angeles on Monday morning, Pathe cameramen L. C. Hutt and A. B. Knetchtel left immediately in an airplane for the stricken city and soon had their cameras grinding upon the scenes of destruction.

Feist Sees Spirit of Confidence

Says Progressive Exhibitors Cooperate With Producers and Distributors for Future Good of the Entire Industry

THE birth of a rose brought Felix Feist to the motion picture industry. The general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, was, several years ago, invited to witness a screening of a Kinemacolor subject showing the gradual development of a rose bud into a full grown rose and from that time on was "sold" so far as motion pictures were concerned.

By degrees Felix Feist became associated with Equitable, World, Goldwyn, Joseph M. Schenck Enterprises and then was appointed general sales manager for Metro-Goldwyn.

He has recently returned from a trip covering the Western part of the United States and his observations on conditions as they exist today as compared to ten, or ever four years ago, are interesting to say the least.

"What impresses me most," said Mr. Feist, "is the wonderful spirit of confidence that has come to be a part of the motion picture business. Times certainly have changed since I first toured the country selling film and they have changed for the better, decidedly so. To me it is really a beautiful thing to feel the spirit of square dealing, high business ideals and the confidence that now exists between the exhibitor and the seller of motion pictures.

"The progressive exhibitor, the theatre man who has grown up with the business, learned it thoroughly and really progressed now works in a spirit of cooperation with the distributor and producer in a concentrated effort to build for the future. In many instances exhibitors, through affiliation with producing organizations, have learned something about production costs and this has been a factor in influencing them to adhere to a live and let live policy, a willingness to pay fair prices for product and to discard the old time methods.

Felix Feist, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn.

"Of course there are still attempts at unfairness but only by those who are unfair themselves and probably always will be unfair. There comes to mind an exhibitor who refused to meet any advance for our 1925-26 product over that of the past year. He is one of those who close their eyes to the progressiveness of our company, who fails to see the much greater benefit he will derive from the addition of such stars as Lillian Gish, Marion Davies, Norma Shearer, John Gilbert, Lon Chaney and Ramon Novarro to our program.

"There is no progressive distributor who tries to take all that comes into the box office. Naturally he would be killing his own business if he did. The way motion pictures are sold today is under a policy of a fair, legitimate profit to both the seller and the buyer. The exhibitor knows the producer must make money to turn out his pictures and the producer knows that the theatre owner must make money to keep in business. This has brought them together in a spirit of confidence and mutual understanding that has done much to put our business on the high plane that it occupies today.

"The progressiveness and high standing of the industry is also met with among the managers and salesmen of the branch offices as well as the home offices. The 'gyp' has been eliminated and today we come in contact with an unusually intelligent, honest and high class body of men in the sales division of the industry," concluded Mr. Feist.

This theatre was recently taken over by the Warners, in addition to The New Concord, Concord; the Lexington, Lexington; the Lincoln, Winston-Salem and the Broadway, Columbia, S. C. Independents Select Captains

Association Names Zone Leaders for Building of National Organization

REGIONAL directors will serve as field captains in the building of the national organization of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America. This was decided upon at the meeting of the organization held at the Astor Hotel in New York last week with Frederick H. Elliott, general manager, presiding.

The regional directors will work in conjunction with the agents of the M. P. T. O. A. Play Date Bureau and will be charged with the duty of guarding independent interests, passing upon eligibility of applicants for membership and conducting membership campaigns.

This plan of campaign, suggested by General Manager Elliott provides for an immediate and active drive in behalf of the members of the organization, with the country divided into 26 zones. More than half of the field representatives have already been chosen. Those selected are:

Lester S. Tobias, Yale Film Exchange, New Haven; Max Milder, Trio Productions, Washington, D. C.; A. C. Bromberg, Progress Pictures, Atlanta and New Orleans; Joseph L. Send Letter on Block Booking

M. P. T. O. A. Solicits Stand of Producers and Distributors on Group Selling

R. F. WOODHULL, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has sent a circular letter to producers and distributors requesting information as to whether they will adopt a block selling policy in marketing their product for next season.

Following is the text of the letter:

"Inquiries are coming to us from theatre owners throughout the country seeking information as to whether or not the various distributing companies are going to attempt a compulsory block selling policy of their product for the coming film season.

"One of the major producing companies has advised us that while in the past their company has asked theatre owners to buy on this basis, this year no theatre owner would be compelled to purchase all of their pictures in this way and has asked us to so advise the theatre owners of the country.

"We are writing you and the other distributing companies seeking an expression of opinion from you in this matter, and we would be glad to have word from you as to the policy you intend to pursue or are pursuing in this regard, together with any explanatory statement you may wish to make with relation thereto, as the matter is of special interest to the theatre owners of the country and it is our purpose to convey to them the information received in answer to this letter.

"We believe that the volume of quality pictures of real box office merit available in the market today, makes the compulsory purchasing of pictures in large blocks at the commencement of a season a hardship as well as unfair to theatre owners.

Marcus Named F. B. O. Sales Manager

Fills Vacancy Caused by Berman's Death—Colvin Brown Made Vice President Under Executive Readjustment

Lee Marcus, appointed sales manager of F. B. O.

LEE MARCUS, for the last four and a half years assistant sales manager of F. B. O., has been promoted to the position of Sales Manager, to replace the late Harry M. Berman, and Colvin W. Brown, who has been a member of the executive committee for some time, has been made a vice-president and will supervise the distributing departments, it was announced this week by Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and general manager of the company.

Major Thomson stated that the readjustment of the executive personnel would in no way affect Mr. J. I. Schnitzer, first vice-president, who under the new arrangement, Thomson said, would be relieved of routine duties and in a position to devote more time and attention to production activities, studio management and the company's relations with independent producers.

D. A. Poucher, treasurer, will, as heretofore, be in charge of finance and accounts and the personnel of the various offices.

Mr. Marcus demonstrated his qualifications for the position he will occupy, the announcement stated, during the late Mr. Berman's illness, which extended over a period of a year and a half. As Mr. Berman's assistant, Marcus assumed many of the duties and responsibilities of sales manager, and handled a multitude of important problems connected with the sales of the product distributed by F. B. O.

In commenting on Mr. Marcus' promotion, Major Thomson said:

"Mr. Marcus' broad experience in the sales department of this, and other companies, makes him ideally fitted for the position of sales manager."

Colvin Brown's elevation to a vice-presidency with the company is also announced to be a reward for the abilities and capacity which he has shown since joining the

Marked Decline In Film Imports

1924 Positive Imports 40% Under Previous Year—Slight Increase in Negatives, Commerce Report Shows

IMPORTS of motion picture films into the United States for the year 1924 showed a considerable falling off from film imports for 1923 according to figures just issued by the Department of Commerce. For while 2,228,660 linear feet of negatives valued at $942,807 came into the country in 1924 as compared with 2,064,390 valued at $657,509 in 1923, imports of positives for 1924 amounted only to 4,502,031 valued at $241,065 in comparison with 7,053,232 linear feet in value $323,493 for the previous year. How small a comparative total these figures really represent is aptly illustrated by the fact that American exports of positives were in 1924 nearly 180,000,000 feet or approximately 40 times as great as our imports of these, while our 8,000,000 feet of negatives exported in 1924 were nearly four times the amount of negatives imported.

Of the 4,502,031 feet of positives imported in 1924, 3,783,760 feet of positives or well over 80 per cent came from Europe. Of this about 3,350,000 feet came from four countries—United Kingdom, France, Germany and Italy. France led with about 1,600,000 feet; the United Kingdom was second with about 880,000 feet, while Germany and Italy followed in that order with totals of approximately 712,000 feet and 223,000 feet, respectively. The first three countries mentioned were incidentally our largest sources of supply, though in the case of France and the United Kingdom our imports were in the case of the former nearly 2,000,000 feet and in the case of the latter about 400,000 feet below 1923 figures. Imports of positives from Germany on the other hand, increased about 30,000 feet over 1923 and from Italy about 40,000 feet.

Imports of positives from countries outside of Europe were with two exceptions, negligible. These were Japan from which we imported about 320,000 feet of positives in 1924 as against 301,000 feet in 1923, and Canada which showed figures of a little over 223,000 feet as against 271,000 feet approximately for the two periods. The whole of Latin America furnished us with only 66,959 feet for 1924, the Far East with only about 75,000 feet—exclusive of Japan—and Africa and the Near East with something over 30,000 feet over 20,000 feet of which originated in Egypt.

The situation as regards imports of negatives in 1924 was virtually the same. Out of 2,228,000 feet imported, 1,656,000 feet or nearly 90 per cent came from Europe, and of these about 1,530,000 came from the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Italy. France—as in the case of positives—led with about 530,000 feet as against 279,000 feet in 1923. Italy, however, was second with 404,000 feet in round numbers as compared with approximately 287,000 feet the previous year, while the United Kingdom showed only 394,000 feet—a decrease of about 115,000 feet over the 1923 figures. Germany, the fourth country, stood about the same in 1924 as in 1923 with about 201,000 feet.

Few negatives were imported from regions outside of Europe. Canada with about 113,000 feet—as against 172,000 feet last year—was the only country to go over the 100,000 mark. All of Latin America sent us only 182,438 feet of negatives in 1924 as compared with 125,000 feet in 1923—this being greater in footage, however, than our imports of positives from there. The Far East furnished us with 192,000 feet of negatives—243,000 feet in 1923—and Africa and the Near East about 83,000 feet.

English Plan Huge Studio and Theatre Project

A NATIONAL Film project involving the expenditure of seven and a half million dollars for the establishment of studios and the acquisition of theatres in the principal cities of the world was discussed at the National Kinematograph Exhibitors' Conference at Glasco, July 1, according to a London wireless despatch to the New York Times.

The movement looks toward the placing of Britain's film industry on a competitive basis with that of the United States.

The plan was outlined by T. A. Welsh, managing director of Welsh, Pearson & Co., Ltd., and received considerable attention from film men.

Welsh said that the sooner all the British film studios were scrapped the better, because they were totally inadequate for big productions.

He suggested the building of a vast studio thirty miles outside London, wherein all British companies could produce under rules to be administered by a cabinet council of the British film industry.

Theatres should then be acquired in the chief cities of the world to insure rofitable distribution for British films, he added.

It was intimated that the money in whole or in part might be obtained through a Government subsidy.

Warner Brothers Sign Bonns

Will Direct Big Exploitation Department in the Interest of New Pictures

Bonns will recruit a staff that eventually will extend to all important districts for the proper exploitation of Warner pictures on the 1925-26 program.

Bonns has long been regarded one of the foremost exploitation directors in the picture industry. He has put the big punch behind many outstanding successes of the past few years. This is not his first engagement with the Warner organization. He was with this firm in the early days of their ascending career. He was behind the campaigns that put over "The Lost City," "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days" and other Warner successes.

After leaving Warner Brothers Bonns went with Goldwyn, where, among other exploits, he put over the "Brothers Under the Skin" stunt that gained much publicity. He went with Metro-Goldwyn when the firms merged. His last stunt for that concern was the launching of the trackless train, now crossing the continent.

Bonns assumed his new duties with Warners this week and until his exploitation force is organized will devote his time to preparing special national exploitation for the pictures on the 1925-26 program.

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Weekly Edition of Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

Productions listed are new pictures on which reports were not available previously.

For ratings on current and older releases see MOTION PICTURE NEWS—first issue of each month.

KEY—The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage rating of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

Girl on Street Advertised "Lady of the Night"

When "Lady of the Night" played at the Riviera theatre in Knoxville, Tenn., C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, attracted attention to the showing by putting a girl on the street dressed up as the tough girl Molly in the picture. This girl was procured by advertising in the local dailies for a young woman to impersonate Miss Shearer. Over fifty applicants applied. The girl selected was provided with a lamp post made of light pine, and posed against it as a tough nut. This stunt proved a knock-out. Such crowds were attracted that it was necessary for her to move her post from time to time from one block to another to prevent congestion of traffic.

Twenty-five 1-sheets were posted, with fifteen 3-sheets, five 6-sheets and seven 24-sheets. Two large illuminated boxes containing 6-sheets above the lobby provided a splendid flash on the picture. Five thousand heralds were distributed.

Active co-operation was received by Exploiteer Haug throughout the campaign from W. E. Drumbar, enterprising manager of the Riviera.

Kingsmore Gives "Charley's Aunt" a Push

Making the most of the varied possibilities for exploitation offered by the title and story of "Charley's Aunt," Howard Price Kingsmore, manager of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, gave the picture a first rate campaign.

One of the best features of his exploitation was the replica of Charley's aunt-wig, cap, dress and all—who was seen on the streets of Atlanta during the week before the picture was screened, riding slowly along in an old fashioned surrey, diven by a negro coachman. On the back of the surrey hung a large banner, proclaiming in glaring letters, "Charley's Aunt, from Brazil where the Nuts come from, Visiting at Howard theatre all next week." This quaint equipage, drawn by two handsome horses, attracted attention wherever it went.

A live goose was suspended from the marquee of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., when "The Goose Hangs High" (Paramount) played there.

The second publicity stunt designed by Kingsmore in connection with the picture was a special Mothers' Day matinee held on the Monday morning following Mothers' Day to which all mothers over forty years were invited free of charge. Part of this plan included a tie-up with the Atlanta Constitution, which printed admission coupons for the mothers.

"Last Laugh" Given Strong Campaign in Frisco

One of the most effective campaigns yet devised for "The Last Laugh" was worked out by W. C. Getty, Universal exploiteer in San Francisco, in co-operation with the Union Square theatre.

First a preview was held to which several hundred prominent San Franciscans were invited. At the close of the showing, "Jury" slips were passed out on which the guests might record their opinions and the next day found such papers as the Examiner quoting these jurymen to the extent of nearly a column of publicity. The Examiner, in playing up the society angle of the affair, also ran a 9-inch two column original sketch of a prominent San Francisco matron who was present.

Two contests were arranged which proved unusually successful. One, with the Daily News, was for stories of when the writers had enjoyed the "Last Laugh," and the other, with the Illustrated Daily Herald, was for answers to the question: "Should Movies End Happily or Truly?" "The Last Laugh," as will be recalled, had two endings—one logical and sad, and the other illogical and happy.

A doorman is the central figure of the film, and so the Union Square had a doorman who was made up as almost a perfect duplicate of Jannings's famous character. He was J. Aldrich Libby, a former headliner on the Keith Circuit.

Radio Broadcast Stunt for "Zander" in Akron, Ohio

C. C. Deardourff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, recently aided the showing of "Zander the Great" at the Allen theatre in Akron, O., by announcing the run daily over the radio from station WADC, and by taking extra space in all the local dailies.

A cooperative window tie-up arranged by Manager R. T. Newton of the Capitol theatre, Little Rock, Ark., for the showing of "Seven Chances" (Metro-Goldwyn).

Varied Store Tie-ups for "The Great Divide"

A chain of seven drug stores were recently tied up by Norman W. Pyle, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, when "The Great Divide" played at the Princess theatre in Fairmont, W. Va. A ticket to see this picture was offered free to every purchaser of Krank's Toilet Preparations, and this circumstance was liberally advertised in the press. Seven windows were placed at Pyle's disposal, who used them to exploit the showing with exceptionally good effect.

An arithmetical contest suggested by the exhibitor's service book was planted in the Fairmont Times, and ran in the Sunday and Monday editions. Tickets were offered as prizes, and the competition proved popular beyond expectations. The names of the winners were duly printed in The Times. Extra space was taken in all the local dailies and the town was well posted.

Varied "Way of a Girl" Ads in Evansville Drive

When "The Way of a Girl" played recently at the American theatre in Evansville, Ind., Charles Glickauf, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, aroused considerable interest in the showing by arranging a peek hole window on the main thoroughfare which attracted attention throughout the week preceding the premiere. Above the peek hole Glickauf put the caption "For Women Only." Inside was a 3-sheet cutout with other advertising matter, including the name of the theatre and the date.

A motorcyclist traveled through the main streets of Evansville carrying a sign on his back reading "Don't Speed! If you must have excitement see 'The Way of a Girl' at the American theatre." This ballyhoo exploited the showing effectively.

Window display of original gown worn in "Madame Sans Gene" (Paramount), arranged by Manager Harry Van Demark of the Queen theatre, Houston.

Four thousand pay-roll envelopes distributed by thirty factories and four down town department stores carried announcements of the engagements with a cut from the picture, and one thousand heralds were given away on the main streets. The town was well posted and three slides and one trailer were used in various showhouses.

"Crimson Runner" Showing Thoroughly Heralded

Heralded by an avalanche of publicity which served to let all Cleveland know that a motion picture star was coming to town, Priscilla Dean's new personal appearance act with "The Crimson Runner," opened at Keith's 105th Street theatre in the big Ohio city recently.

Perhaps the stunt most productive of results was a tie-up arranged with the Cleveland News whereby Priscilla Dean sold autographed copies of 'Joanna,' a new song hit by a Cleveland composer, which the News was sponsoring, at a down-town store for one hour on a specified morning. Announcement of the stunt was made with a two-column cut and story on the front page, followed by a full column length story on page one the next day. The following day the News ran a four-column cut and story, and followed up on the following Sunday by a scene taken in the store which they published in the rotogravure section.

The Cleveland Press was inaugurating its annual marble contest, and when Miss Dean offered a trophy to the winner, the Press reciprocated by using stories and pictures of the star being taught to shoot by the previous year's champion. Motion pictures were also made of this and shown in a local news reel distributed in the Cleveland territory.

At the N. V. A. ball in Cleveland, Priscilla Dean was made official hostess. An elaborate dinner was given in her honor at the Statler hotel and during her stay she attended a number of civic and social affairs.

While in Cleveland, national tie-ups were made with the Chandler automobile, with Dr. Kahler's shoes, with the Work-Rite Radio company, with a new make of knitted capes, and with "Secrets," a periodical published in Cleveland.

An effective window display on "The Night Club" (Paramount) arranged by Mgr. J. J. Friedl and Pub. Director R. B. Jones of the Palace theatre, Dallas, Texas.

Pathe News Shows Films of French-Riff War

Pictures of the French offensive against the Riff tribesmen in Morocco are a feature of Pathe News No. 52. The war in Morocco is being covered by Pathe News by Andre Glattli of the Paris staff of the organization. Glattli has shown great daring and resource in obtaining first-hand views of the hostilities, frequently facing the greatest dangers to make photographs of the clashes between the armed forces.

Among the views which are shown in this issue of Pathe News are the following:

Troops advance to launch fierce attack upon Riff tribesmen in Astar village; the French artillery opens up with full force to shell the nest of the Moors as the bombing of Astar continues; Scores of wounded—some at the cameraman's very side—the Red Cross workers give heroic aid; some of the desperately injured are rushed to ambulances in the rear by airplane; behind the lines at Fez, Marshal Lyautey, in charge of war against the Riffs consults with General Hoecht, his chief of staff.

Larry Kent Lead for Miss Vaughn in New Series

B. P. Fineman, general manager of the F. B. O. Studios, has announced the selection of Larry Kent for the lead opposite Alberta Vaughn in "The Adventures of Maisie" series of two-reel plays which are to be based on the stories of that title written by Nell Martin and published in a popular fiction magazine.

"Don Coo Coo" is the title of the eleventh episode in the "Peacemakers" series in which Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara are featured by F. B. O. Scenes from the picture are shown above.

Play Up Short Subjects For Box Office Results

Value of Exploiting Short Reels is Told

By S. J. Maurice, Special Representative, Serial Dept., Universal

(Editor's Note.—This is the third of a series of articles by Mr. Maurice. The concluding article will appear next week.)

IN previous articles I gave the result of my interviews with representative newspaper men in many big cities on the question of short subjects, and told of the happy experience of exhibitors in some parts of the country who were long-headed enough to advertise the short stuff on a par with their features.

But in many other sections I found managers who were not awake to the publicity value of the one and two reelers. In fact the majority of them were still absolutely blind to the possibilities of this important half of their program. They were "hypped" by the names of big stars and the fancy "box office titles" that so many producers give their pictures, irrespective of the actual value of the pictures as entertainment. And it was no surprise to me to hear from most of these men that business was "not so good." They complained about the quality of the five reelers, saying that their patrons often openly expressed disappointment and not one of them realized that he had missed a big trick to cover up this deficiency in not hammering away on the short subject angle. What did I tell 'em? Play Up Your Short Stuff.

"If you are using a hundred line ad. give the 'shorts' almost an even break on the space. Let the feature and its star or stars have sixty lines if you think they are worth it, but never devote less than forty of the hundred lines to the remainder of your program. If you have a Century or a Bull's Eye or a Sennett comedy, it is surely worth twenty per cent of your newspaper space, the news-reel or serial is certainly worth ten per cent and the other ten per cent should be given over to your musical features."

Exhibitors seem to forget that Charlie Chaplin, Reginald Denny, Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton, Tom Mix, Hoot Gibson and other stars who are making features now and specials began in the one and two reelers. Suppose their pictures ten years ago had been treated like the short subjects are today. These stars, among the biggest money getters now, would never have reached their present dignity, opulence and eminence. We all remember when a two reel Charlie Chaplin meant capacity business to any theatre that played it. If a Chaplin was on the bill the patrons did not ask, or care, what the five reel picture was. In those days the exhibitor played up the short stuff because he realized its value.

Well, there is just as much value in the same department today. There are embryo stars of the first magnitude in comedies right now. Young men and women who in a few years—maybe sooner—are going to be as well known and draw as much money as any of the above mentioned. Mr. Exhibitor, why not be the one to "discover" them in your town? Tell your people how good they are and you will begin to cash in on them while you still can buy them at a modest figure, before they, too, graduate into high priced features and specials.

Every company has some great young talent that is surely coming to the front. Take Universal, for instance, with its recently developed talent. This firm has several youngsters who are of "special calibre" right now, but who are doing the short stuff and can be had at two reel prices. So have Pathe. So have the F. B. O. and the Fox people. The Educational, too, have many. It won't be long before you will be paying much more for the Puffys, the Wanda Wileys and the Arthur Lakes. The astute Mr. Laemmle sees what is ahead or he never would have placed them under long term contracts. "There's a reason" for everything that Mr. Laemmle does — and it is always a business reason. This applies to his revival of the famous Buster Brown and his dog Tige. These comedies are short subjects, worth twenty per cent of any exhibitor's advertising, no matter what his feature may be.

The Pathe people are going stronger than ever with their Hal Roach stuff, their Mack Sennett product; their "Stereoscopiks," their news-reel, the Grantland Rice "Sportlights" and serials. This applies to the Educational and Fox, too.

Why hide such entertainment? Why not advertise it when you are playing it? It ought to be of significance that the producers of short subjects heavily advertise their product in order to sell it to exhibitors. Should it not follow that exhibitors who buy it as a result of such advertising would see the wisdom of advertising it to sell to their customers? Any other course seems the height of business folly.

Did you ever notice the way the Universal and Pathe and Educational and Fox advertise their short subjects? Examine their displays in the trade journals and see the proportion of space they devote to this part of their output—just about the same proportion that the exhibitor should give it in his advertising after he buys it. It is no secret that a very big part of the huge 235 per cent dividend declared by Fox was due to the drive on short subjects.

The serial comes under this head also, its chapter forming short subjects on a program. Have you noticed the nation-wide tie-ups that the Universal has made with the leading papers in the United States and Canada on its serials, the biggest thing of its kind ever pulled off in motion picture history? The greatest papers in 44 cities—the Times in Buffalo, the Press in Pittsburg, the Star in Indianapolis, the News in Dallas, the Herald in San Francisco, the News in Los Angeles, for instance—are printing stories of these serials, each carrying ten thousand lines of advertising and giving fifty columns of publicity. Why?

The publishers of these papers know the value of thrilling western stories and adventurous mystery tales. Their readers, being red-blooded and romance loving, fairly eat up such stuff! They want it! Therefore, the newspapers give it to them and advertise the fact that they are going to do so. Result? A big boom in circulation.

What is the lesson in this to the exhibitor? When he plays this kind of a picture, he, too, should advertise it and increase his circulation, his patronage. If the printing of a serial will jump the circulation of a newspaper 50,000 copies, advertising it by a theatre certainly will increase the theatre's business proportionately.

Play up the Short Stuff!
There's Millions in It!

Langdon Comedy for Pathe Completed by Sennett

"Lucky Stars," Harry Langdon's first two-reel comedy since finishing his feature-length production for Sennett, and "A Sweet Pickle," in which Alice Day will be featured, have been completed at the Sennett studios and will be early releases on the Pathe program.

In "Lucky Stars" Langdon is supported by Vernon Dent and Natalie Kingston. It was directed by Harry Edwards.

The Alice Day vehicle will present Ernest Wood, Alma Bennett, Jack Richardson and Barney Hellum in principal roles. Art Rosson directed the picture.

The Sennett Studios have installed a research department consisting of 3800 volumes, an innovation for a comedy plant.

New "Stereoscopiks" Film for Release July 5

"Ouch," the latest contribution to the Ives-Leventhal "Stereoscopiks" films which Pathe is presenting, will be released July 5th. It will be the third offering in this group of third-dimension films, and is said to abound in the startling effects which attracted attention to "Zowie!" and "Luna-Cy!"

One incident which is said to be especially thrilling shows a pirate who glares at the spectator and slowly takes out a pistol, reaches out his hand until the firearm appears to touch the very faces of the witnesses and fires.

Fox Selects Marion Harlan

Will Have Leading Role in O. Henry Series, With Daniel Keefe Directing

FOX FILM CORPORATION has selected Marion Harlan, daughter of Otis Harlan to portray the leading role in each of the series of eight two-reel pictures to be made by that company from the O. Henry stories. Miss Harlan was chosen after screen tests for the role had been made of eighty-four young ladies.

With the announcement of the selection of Miss Harlan, also comes the announcement that Daniel Keefe will direct the series. For the past five years Keefe has been assistant director to Rowland V. Lee.

Miss Harlan should be well qualified for the leading role. She started her stage career when she was a baby and for a number of years played juvenile roles. Later for three years she was a feature dancer in the big ensembles with the Metropolitan Opera Company. For some time past she has been essaying flapper roles in the screen. She enacted roles of this type in the two recent Fox releases, "Wings of Youth" and "The Kiss Barrier." She has just completed the role of "Millie" in "Thank You."

Daniel Keefe, who has just been promoted to direct the coming series is a New Yorker who has been connected with the industry for the past eight years. During his association as assistant to Rowland V. Lee he figured in the making of sixteen pictures. He will start the direction of "Shoes," the first episode in the O. Henry series, in the near future.

He is handling the megaphone on the present production. With the exception of a few years he spent with other interests, Spitzer has been in the industry in various capacities since its earliest days.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"The White Wing's Bride"
Pathe—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

HARRY LANGDON'S rise to fame throws a new light on an old picture—"old" in the sense that it was made before Langdon joined the Sennett organization and started to display the extraordinary abilities which have made him one of the most talked of comedians acting before the camera today. The "new light" is something corresponding to an interest and absorption in the work of the featured player which lends attention value to a picture which on its own account is little better than a mere routine affair in two reels. It was produced by Principal Pictures Corporation under the direction of Alf Goulding. Mr. Goulding also has traveled a long way since "The White Wing's Bride" was made.

Langdon's acting in this picture differs from his later performances mostly in the finish which he has acquired in achieving comedy effects and characterization. The distinctive mannerisms which are his now were part of his equipment when he essayed the inconsequential role of the white wing who suddenly is projected into a plot concerning the theft of a valuable jewel. His make-up, too, is much the same, the main features being over-sized coats and under-sized hats.

"The White Wing's Bride" will not bring the laughter which is now expected of Harry Langdon comedies. It is conventional slapstick, introducing a plot merely for the purpose of supplying here and there an excuse for action, action and more action. There is the ever-present "chase" and it does not seem different from many others which have been done time out of mind in the two reelers. Langdon is set upon by a pair of fearsome-looking Orientals, who are in pursuit of the jewel which has been stolen from the idol. The jewel has been purchased by the father of the girl whom Harry is courting, so his interests lie not only in the direction of eluding the Orientals, he must outsmart them and keep the gem, if he is to win the proud beauty.

The players who support the star provide all the assistance that is possible under the circumstances.

The Cast

The White Wing.....Harry Langdon

The Story—A poor but honest boy is in love with the daughter of a rich banker. He works faithfully at his trade as a street sweeper, until a strange twist of circumstance drops him into the very midst of a deep-dyed plot. Aboard an ocean liner two crafty Orientals seek to recover a valuable jewel stolen originally from an idol in their country. It is possessed and prized by the rich banker and by a mistake comes into the hands of our hero, who is chased about by the Orientals. He escapes them, but again meets his pursuers at a masked-ball, where they try to cast suspicion upon the hero for the theft of the jewel. But he triumphs, mostly by running away from danger, and wins the girl as a reward for returning the jewel to her father.

Classification—Slapstick comedy with very little plot and rather light on the "gag" side.

Production Highlights—The presence of Harry Langdon in the cast and the staging given the piece.

Summary—Compared with later works featuring Harry Langdon, this is disappointing, though the star displays many of the characteristics which have won him wide popularity as a screen comedian. The picture is lacking more in gag material than in quality of performance and production. It has some amusing moments and may ride along to fair success on the reputation and appeal of the star.

"The Ropin Venus"
Universal-Mustang—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is a western featuring Josie Sedgwick that should satisfy the most rabid fan of the short westerns. Miss Sedgwick is seen to the best possible advantage in this story, which is an exceptionally good one that has thrills aplenty, rough riding, comedy and every element that goes to make for success in a picture of this type. Miss Sedgwich is well suited to this type of picture. She is an exceptional rider and to all appearances not unskilled with the rope. She depends upon both of these accomplishments to expose and bring to justice the hard band of cattle rustlers that, with her, make up the action in this picture.

There are all the usual western characters in the picture; the unsuspected villain, the sheriff, the bad men and the rest of them, but Miss Sedgwick carries off all the honors. She discovers the rustlers' signal announcing when the road is clear for releasing the horses and cattle and eventually turns up the whole band by using their own signalling device to attract the attention of her father and the pursuing posse.

Among the thrills of the picture is that in which Miss Sedgwick is captured by the rustlers and made prisoner in their shack. She makes her escape through the roof, to which the signalling device is attached, and by some clever manipulation makes prisoners of both rustlers left to guard over her.

In addition to the good work done by Miss Sedgwick, the other leading roles are in competent hands. Edward Cecil, plays the sinister and sneaking individual, who is the real leader of the rustlers, and Colin Chase has the hero role.

The Cast

"Jerry" Ramsdell.....Josie Sedgwick
Eugene Slade.....Edward Cecil
Bob Wallace.....Colin Chase

A Mustang Picture, directed by Ernst Laemmle. Story by Isadore Bernstein. Photography by Ben Kline.

The Story—Jerry, daughter of the Sheriff gets on the trail of the gang of cattle rustlers, when she suspects Eugene Slade of being one of them. She trails him, sees him flash the "all clear" signal to the gang and then ropes him as he tries to make his getaway. Later she is captured by the band and taken to their shack, where she overpowers her guards, flashes the signal to her father and the posse and the entire band is rounded up.

Classification—A western comedy-drama that abounds in fast thrilling action and some highly interesting riding and roping.

Summary—This is one of the best of the two-reel westerns displayed recently. It is very well directed and capably acted, with a story that is way above the average. It should be liked wherever the western flourishes.

"Sherlock Sleuth"
Pathe—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

ARTHUR STONE is the star of this two-reeler from the Roach studios. It is a comedy specializing in horse-play and concerned with the doings in a hotel where a super-burglar plies his trade despite the elaborate sleuthing of a house detective who is "so good that he wears two badges."

Toward the end of the proceedings the lion from the Selig Zoo is projected into the affair, and that seems to be the key to the entire situation—because the lion is the comedy play-doctor. He comes to the rescue when the scenarist and the director get winded, and carries the action along at a fast physical pace if nothing else. How much longer the lion can last as something either fearsome or funny we have no idea. But it seems that he has been going strong for such a stretch that he himself must start to puff and pant pretty soon.

The picture is amusing only in spots. It depends too much upon the easy formula of presenting only movement based on familiar gags. There is one fresh gag in the plot. This shows the hero leaping over the cliff with the girl dressed in hoop-skirts acting as a parachute to retard the descent. That seemed rather funny and much cleverer than anything else to be discovered in the play.

Stone, whose career in the pictures has not met with the success which his stage work promised for him, is in the sort of character he has done in his previous comedies. He effects a make-up and a pose which is perhaps too wooden for the screen. The alabaster face and the jerky movement do not fare so well in pictures as they do on the comedy stage, and perhaps the fact that Stone has merely transferred his comics from the stage to pictures instead of adapting them to the new medium has something to do with the unresponsive reception which greeted his screen efforts.

The star is supported by some of the most able troupers in the Roach stock company. Martha Sleeper, for example, is prominent as a hello-girl who is in love with the house detective. Miss Sleeper is a comedienne who is bound to be prominent even though her opportunities are scant as they are in this offering. Noah Young appears as the hotel proprietor, and Marjorie Whiteis, William Gillespe, Helen Gilmore and Jack Gavin appear at odd moments throughout the play.

The Cast

Detective.....Arthur Stone
Telephone Operator.....Martha Sleeper
Hotel Proprietor.....Noah Young
Vamp.....Marjorie Whiteis
Guests.....William Gillespie, Helen Gilmore, Jack Gavin

Directed by Ralph Ceder.

The Story—A master burglar has been preying upon various hotels of the city. Because of the advertised efficiency of Sherlock Sleuth, house detective, of a certain hostelry many guests register there. Among them is the burglar and his aid, a vamp. The latter soon eliminates the detective from contention and the raid begins. But Sherlock gets loose and with the aid of a lion he lands the crooks in a police wagon. Then there is a wild ride for the lion chases the driver and the driverless car tears across the country, finally plunging over a cliff.

Classification—A quick-action comedy designed for general audiences.

Production Highlights—The settings and photography. The well-written titles and the speedy finish which culminates in a spectacular automobile crash.

Summary—A routine comedy featuring fast action and depending mostly upon familiar gags. There is plenty of movement, however, and the "tag" to the play is stirring and rather amusing.

"Just in Time"

Universal-Century—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WANDA WILEY has a dandy story in this two-reel Century in which humor, action and thrills are about equally divided and serve to make a splendid vehicle for this clever comedienne. Strange as it may seem it is a good newspaper story, which is rare in any type of picture.

Wanda is the feature writer on the Daily Milk and is doing a series of feature stories on a mysterious band that has haunted the city. The editor's son is finally carried off by this band and held for ransom. Wanda, after a series of thrilling episodes that would make some of the serials look tame, finds the rendezvous of the band, rescues the editor's son and delivers his captors to the editorial rooms.

There is much about this picture to recommend it. There are incidents about it akin to Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last," for the heroine does not hestitate to climb water pipes on high buildings or to negotiate cornices on straight walls. She climbs to some dizzy heights that should set audiences a-gape. Drain pipes collapse with her and she hangs suspended until one wonders how she is ever going to get safely through with it all.

By the simple process of waylaying a girl accomplice of the mystic band, changing clothes with her and finding a map which reveals the headquarters she gains access to the abductors' den and securing a key releases the youth held for ransom. The comedy element enters strongly into the story by the manner in which Wanda stands off her many foes. She runs them dizzy through the different chambers while the editor's son flees for police aid. The battle continues at length in the den until Wanda makes her getaway with the band at her heels. She leads them a merry chase which takes them through the side window of the newspaper shop just as the police arrive.

The Cast

The Girl.....Wanda Wiley
The Hero.....Joe Bonner

Century Comedy directed by Edward Luddy.

The Story—Wanda, a feature writer on a newspaper learns that a mystic band has carried off the editor's son. She gets on the trail of the bandits, forces their female accomplice to change clothes with her and in the pocket of the dress is a map locating the bandits' den. She gains access to the den, locates a key to the chamber in which the editor's son is held prisoner and releases him. She then stands off the band, makes her escape with the bandits at her heels and leads them to the newspaper office, where they are all captured by the police. There is the usual happy ending in which Wanda accepts the proposal of the youth.

Classification—A comedy replete with action and abounding in thrills.

Summary—An exceptionally good story, well directed and abounding in thrills and comedy situations. Miss Wiley gives her best performance to date and the picture is one that should be appreciated by almost any type of audience.

Pathe Review No. 28

(One Reel)

THOUGH another installment of the "Here Comes the Bride" series, showing the wedding ceremonies and customs of different countries and races, is included in this issue of the Review, it is the color subject which romps off with feature honors. The scenic contribution shows the picturesque valley of rocks in Southern France known as the Gorges of Ardeche. The scenery is beautiful and the color seems at its best in this charming screen reproduction. The marriage customs feature shows the American Bride, first giving the ceremonies practiced by the Indians and then a modern, up-to-the-minute nuptial shindig of the most elaborate sort. "Wonders in Wax" gives an inside view of the making of the life-like dummies which reach their Paradise in the nickel museums and shop windows.—T. C. KENNEDY

Lloyd Hamilton in a scene from "Waiting," an Educational release.

"The Knockout Man"

Universal-Mustang—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

FRED WILLIAMS wrote a fair story in this Western, but like most of them the incidents are grossly exaggerated and made fairly impossible. It is based on the doctrine of "turning the other cheek" when your enemy smites you, and as a consequence Jack Perrin, who plays the role of the hero gets himself badly smitten. In fact he is knocked about from pillow to post to such an extent as to make him appear ridiculous.

Louise Lorraine and Perrin are the featured players, and the fact that Perrin, a reformed gambler falls in love with her is responsible for most of his difficulties. Miss Lorraine is the daughter of a Minister who comes to this western town to reform it and both are amazed at the lawlessness of the place. They try to teach the men to love their enemies and as each is every other one's enemy it is rather a difficult proposition.

Perrin is the first the reform wave hits. He has more or less reigned supreme as the town's best fighter, but practicing the new doctrine he suffers humility at the hands of first one and then the other, until Bull Conlon insults the minister's daughter. Even then he hesitates to act until called upon by the minister to do so. Then he reveals his old fighting proclivities and wins his way back into the good graces of the girl he loves.

There is some fairly good comedy in the picture and some rather lively fight scenes with all of the western atmosphere that characterizes these two reel westerns. Miss Lorraine makes an attractive heroine, but unfortunately Perrin is seen at his best only in spots. It's rather a tough and impossible role for a hero to have to assume.

The Cast

Dick Conlon.....Jack Perrin
"Bull" Barrett.....Jim Corey
Parson Rhodes.....Charles Herzinger
Molly.....Louise Lorraine

A Mustang Picture directed by Edward Laemmle. Harry Oswald, cameraman. Story by Fred V. Williams.

The Story—Dick Conlon, gambler in a western town falls in love with the daughter of a visiting minister who is preaching the doctrine of "Love Thy Enemy." Dick reforms, is beaten by a number of the town bullies whem he has previously dominated. He eventually is called upon to protect the girl from the insults of a ruffian and does so only when pleaded with by her father. The ruffian is badly beaten and Dick wins his way back into the good graces of the girl.

Classification—A western comedy-drama in which there is a fair amount of action and a few episodes that offer some real comedy.

Summary—This western is hardly up to the standard of some of the series that have gone before by this producing company. Many of the situations are entirely too ridiculous to be convincing. However it should go fairly well where pictures of this type are popular.

"Waiting"

Educational-Hamilton—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THEY have mixed up another concoction of cream puff, custard pie, slapstick and hokum for Lloyd Hamilton, who assumes the role, first of dishwasher in a restaurant and then as waiter. The comedian is worthy of a little better story than this, which abounds in everything that has been seen in these comedies in the past.

The picture is not without its attractiveness for those who like the short comedy. It will be productive of laughs, as these old well known stunts always are. There is the laugh that follows the waiter who falls down with the tray full, the contents of which are spilled on the head of his rival, who is entertaining the "girl" in the restaurant. There is the ever-ready cream puff that explodes in the face of the comedian.

And there are a few stunts that are not so hackneyed. For instance Lloyd drives his flivver through the side door of an electric train, calmly pays fare for both the auto and himself and then as calmly disembarks through the other side door at the height of a very lofty trestle.

There is an extremely ludicrous scene in which the comedian tackles his dishwashing job. In the absence of a dishwasher the dishes have been piled to the ceiling. Lloyd starts taking them one at a time from the top, then reverses the order and decided to take them from the bottom of the pile. The resultant clash scatters crockery over all parts of the washroom.

When Lloyd is promoted to waiter the action speeds up and the air fairly reeks with Welsh rarebit and other edibles that apparently are prepared for anything but eating. The rarebit, a sticky conglomeration entangles a good part of the diners, and those who escape this mess are victims of other Hamilton indescretions as a waiter, with the rival the principal victim.

The Cast

The Waiter.....Lloyd Hamilton
The Girl.....Ruth Hiatt
The Rival.....Glen Cavender
The Proprietor.....William Beaudine
The Chef.....Otto Fries

By Fred Hibbard. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Photographed by Francis Corby. Produced by Hamilton Comedies.

The Story—Lloyd, broke and out of a job gets employment as a dishwasher and is promoted to waiter in a fashionable restaurant where his rival brings his best girl to dine. Lloyd, humiliated and embarrassed spills much of the edibles on the rival and eventually walks off with girl.

Classification—A slapstick comedy of the custard pie variety replete with hokum, the majority of which is old, but some new.

Summary—Almost entirely lacking in story, this one will be good for many laughs because of its fast action and the number of ludicrous stunts with which the two reels abound. The comedian is seen to the usual good advantage and will add to the prestige with the followers of the short comedies.

"Permit Me"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS is typical of the single reelers in which Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are featured. It is fairly fast comedy which moves along at a good clip without too much time being devoted to the story. It is a series of humorous episodes, all of which go to make for laughs.

Cliff decides the best thing for his bride to do following the ceremony is to go back to work in order that his taxi bills may be paid. Eventually both wind up at the same party, where Cliff is in arrears for a taxi bill. The driver descends upon the party with his gang and there is a general melee which results in the wrecking of the ball room and most of the occupants thereof.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

The Awful Truth

(Peninsula-Producers Dist. Corp.—5917 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is a mild inconsequential effort, so frail of plot and so gentle of action that it has a hard time sustaining itself through its footage. It is one of those pictures which leaves no definite impression. You either take it or you don't. On the stage it might have sparkled with dialogue, but transferred to the screen it is too transparent to hold up. Perhaps had it been treated in a more humorous spirit it would have presented some charm. As it is the footage is too lengthy to offer such a slight marital misunderstanding—and a great volume of titles are used to cover the ground.

The idea centers around a jealous husband who, lacking a sense of humor, mistrusts his bride. Her girl friend says a husband must register jealousy or he would cease to love his wife. These characters are supplemented by a pair of persistent lovers who would break up the romance if possible. That's the plot. The incident takes up a series of very mild situations—some of which become silly in the way the characters play tag or the other popular garden pastime—"you chase me and I'll chase you."

The plot doesn't seem to serve any purpose. The husband comes home unexpectedly from a western trip and catches his wife with an elderly suitor—both of them seeking safety from a fire. The scene leads to a divorce. When nearly a year has elapsed the bride has joined her girl friend at the latter's mountain lodge. It is the winter season. And a boyish suitor enters the story as the fiance of the divorced wife. Meanwhile the girl friend has sent for the heroine's erstwhile husband and conveniently makes her exit. After a few playful and pouty tidbits of romance are shown the picture comes to an end with a reconciliation.

It is much ado about nothing. The winter scenes are pleasing on the eye—and show some toboggan shots, a flash or two of the wife pelting her ex-hubby with snow—and the youthful suitor being tossed by the hero into a snow-bank. These scenes also give the players a chance to sport winter togs. Otherwise their acting opportunities are nil.

THEME. Romance of marital misunderstanding founded upon a jealous husband refusing to trust his wife. A reconciliation follows when his suspicions prove of no consequence.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The lighting and photography. The snow scenes. Moment when husband surprises his wife with rival. The naturalness with which feminine players act.

DIRECTION. Has frail subject and is unable to make anything substantial from it. Relies upon many titles to piece episodes together. Refrains from melodrama, but might have injected more comedy. Good mounting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the element of jealousy as causing domestic unhappiness. Ask teaser questions such as "Does a husband love his wife when he's jealous of her?"

DRAWING POWER. For average houses. Suitable for neighborhoods catering to feminine clientele.

SUMMARY. Not substantial enough to run over two days. Presents a frail plot which spends itself early. Relies upon a wealth of captions to get over. Action fails to get anywhere. It is simple and more or less truthful, but it lacks spark and charm and movement. Players do nothing except pose and sport smart togs.

THE CAST

Lucy Satterley.....Agnes Ayres
Norman Satterley.....Warner Baxter
Kempster.....Phillips Smalley
Danny Leeson.....Raymond Lowney
Josephine.....Winifred Bryson
Mrs. Leeson.....Carrie Clarke Ward

By Arthur Richman. Directed by Paul Powell. Photographed by Joseph Dubray.

SYNOPSIS. Jealous husband loses trust in his wife because of her popularity with men. He surprises her with persistent suitor and the quarrel leads to a divorce. Her girl friend invites both to her mountain lodge with the idea of bringing them together. There is a reconciliation after husband realizes his foolish suspicions.

Kivalina of the Ice Lands

(Rossman-B. C. R. Productions—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WELL here is something different—something unusual. It may not be another "Nanook," but there is no denying that it offers fine entertainment summed up in terms of educational and pictorial values. Earl Rossman, who went up to the northernmost tip of the continent to photograph the privations, hardships and struggles of the Eskimos ekeing out an existence against a bleak background, has come back after two years in the Arctic belt with a true and vivid picture of Eskimo life as it exists today. It comprises some awe-inspiring shots—the best ones featuring the Aurora Borealis in natural colors—and carries enough variety to offset any suggestion of tedium.

The leaden skies match the white spaces of the frozen sea too often—yet some of these scenes contain indescribable charm and wonder. It is the land of Santa Claus and the land of Amundsen, too. The despatches of the famous explorer, lately returned from the Arctic, should stimulate interest in the picture. In our snug seat at the Strand we grasped the will of self-preservation of the Eskimos—who have to struggle against terrible privations to exist.

The action shifts constantly. Here is a shot of hundreds of reindeer being driven by the Eskimos who change their environment according to the seasons; there is a shot of the hunters caught on a mighty ice floe. There are scenes of seal hunting and the spearing of walruses—scenes of a deer being killed before your eyes and an igloo being constructed with quickness and despatch. These people of the frozen wastes make no wasteful gestures. The relentless ice, the rigors of the North have made them a primitive, elemental race who somehow manage to live by practicing economy. There isn't any humor—such as "Nanook" carried, nor are there such dominant personalities present in this picture. But the natives are natural and the lives they lead are rugged and picturesque.

THEME. Heart interest drama revolving around the life of the Eskimos—who have to endure terrific hardships and privations. A mighty hunter wins his sweetheart against tremendous obstacles.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The picturesque scenery. The educational values. The natural color shots of the Northern Lights. The incident in the everyday life of the Eskimos. The reindeer race. The dance.

DIRECTION. Mostly a series of exteriors pieced together showing habits and customs of the Eskimos—the whole comprising a heart interest story. Gets remarkable scenic effects

EXPLOTATION ANGLES. Play up as a hot weather picture. Bill as something different. Tell that it affords a glimpse of life in the northernmost reaches of the continent. Tie up with the Amundsen story.

DRAWING POWER. Has plenty of unusual features to please anyone tired of the stereotyped picture. Good for any house, first runs or otherwise.

SUMMARY. Really something unusual—showing the life of the Eskimos—who endure terrific hardships to exist. Scenes picturesque and awe-inspiring—the whole comprising a heart interest story of Eskimo love and courage. Well titled and photographed,

THE CAST

Kivalina.....The Heroine
Aguvaluk.....The Hero, Kivalina's Sweetheart
Nashuflik.....The Witch Doctor
Tokatoo.....Kivalina's Brother
Nuwak.....The Master Hunter

Photographed and produced by Earl Rossman. Titles by Katherine Hilliker.

SYNOPSIS. Kivalina is betrothed to Aguvaluk, a mighty hunter. Before he can claim her as his wife he must pay his father's debts. Is forced to bring in fifty seals and a silver fox. Goes through terrific hardships to win the girl, but accomplishes his tasks with fine courage. Side-lights of romance show Eskimos in their never-ending search of food.

Faint Perfume

(Schulberg—6228 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT isn't the plot so much as it is the character drawings that provide the points of interest of this picture, an adaptation of a story by Zona Gale. The theme seems to be a side issue in planting a background for it. While it tells of a divorced couple who are constantly quarreling over the custody of the child and introduces a love-sick heroine who has worshipped the husband ever since he married her cousin, this angle of the story never seems to get anywhere. It is a rather aimless development.

The director has done the only thing possible. He has emphasized the vulgar qualities of the heroine's small town relatives—people given to ungovernable tempers and noisy bickerings. The name of the family is Crumb—and each member is catalogued according to his or her animal traits. Thus, one is called the wildcat, another the laughing hyena—and so on for all six members of the household. It is planted that the environment of this family is so sordid that the oldest girl, who had married—refused to have anything to do with them. However, she returns home with the troublesome child and a lover. And the relatives proceed to register all their vulgar traits.

A lot of quaint humor is released in the incident pertaining to this happy(?) family life—and the manner in which the characters are sketched it would seem as if the players enjoyed the work. It is mostly slapstick unfolded in these episodes. Even Dan Mason is in the picture as an aged messenger boy—looking for all the world like the conductor of the Toonerville trolley. Comedy wisecracks are used for the subtitles in several instances.

It is when the wife comes on the scene with her mischievous youngster and the philanderer that we catch some idea of what it is all about. The husband naturally follows and wins the custody of the child after a few scenes of bickering with his wife. And he takes the heroine whose secret romance is finally crowned with happiness. There is suspense when the child nearly loses his life on several occasions. But the youngster's wisecracks in escaping death are too sophisticated even for a precocious kid. The acting is fairly competent. It's a fairly true story, but more realistic in its incident than in its plot. Just an average film.

THEME. Domestic drama revolving around divorced couple fighting for custody of the child with happiness coming to broken-hearted girl when husband gives her his love.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The character sketches of the Crumb family. The suspense in escapades of youngster. Scene when Crumbs surprise the lovers. The moment when husband wins custody of child.

DIRECTION. Points it for atmosphere and to show contrasts of quarrelsome characters, negelecting to develop the dramatic possibilities of plot. Shows good appreciation of family bickerings. Gives it enough color.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up author whose stories are widely read. Tell that it is another "Miss Lulu Bett" in its revelation of family life. Play up cast.

DRAWING POWER. For average houses. Suitable for neighborhood, community and small town houses.

SUMMARY. A combination of ingredients shaken up to point a lot of truth—but this element is not shown any too well. Shows family bickerings and colorful sketches, but plot evaporates to emphasize the hokum incident.

THE CAST

Richmiel Crumb	Seena Owen
Barnaby Powers	William Powell
Ledda Perrin	Alyce Mills
Ma Crumb	Mary Alden
Grandpa Crumb	Russell Simpson
Pearl Crumb	Betty Francisco
Richmiel's Lover	Philo McCollough
Tweet Crumb	Jacqueline Saunders
Orrin Crumb	Ned Sparks
Oliver Powers	Dicky Brandon
The Hired Girl	Joan Standing

By Zona Gale. Directed by Gasnier. Photographed by Allen Siegler.

SYNOPSIS. Cultured cousin is compelled to accept charity from her country cousins—a family given to constant bickering and jangling. She has carried a flower of the bride's bouquet for several years—the oldest girl of the family having married the man she loved. However a divorce has followed this marriage—and the husband comes back into the life of the heroine. They find happiness in their romance and the husband wins custody of his child.

Passionate Youth

(Goldstone-Truart—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is another flapper picture which tells a preposterous story—one which never gets down to any real human values. It guides its characters through scenes which have been constructed more for the sake of dramatic punches than to point any truths. It is obviously plotted, so much so, that you can spot the happy ending from the moment that the wife upon leaving her husband, tells him that a separation is best as they can remarry at any time.

One sees here the flapper daughter as the pivotal figure of the plot. Her father had given up the practice of law to teach the ways of salvation as a clergyman. The mother is a graduate of a law school and the early scenes show her henpecking the husband because he cannot provide a decent living for his family. Her argument is that the girl must be given the benefit of a fat income so that she may be educated and clothed to fit her environment. So the parents decide to separate—and during the separation the husband drops, more or less, out of the story-

A year has gone and this woman maintains a sumptuously appointed home. She loses sympathy for the manner in which she conducts herself with her partner. But he is more interested in the flapper daughter and the result brings the girl to the court for trial as his assassin. The mother having been elected district attorney refuses to prosecute, but an assistant carries on the duty of the office. The father offers himself as a defense attorney and by introducing an eye-witness of the crime brings enough evidence to free her. The reconciliation follows.

The picture is handsomely mounted and offers some interesting scenes of jazz parties. Where it falters is in the manner the central characters conduct themselves. The moral of the piece isn't sound because of the mother's conduct. It's a haphazard plot which seldom hits the bulls-eye of sound, logical treatment. Frank Mayo is the struggling minister, but his chances are few to extract anything from the role. Beverly Bayne makes the wife a creature of depressed moods. Pauline Garon is more in character as the flapper, but the best work is done by Carmelita Geraghty as the gold-digging flirt who saves the daughter.

THEME. Domestic drama of parents who separate in order that daughter may be benefited. Latter leads hectic career as flapper, but in saving her from conviction parents are reconciled.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The jazz parties. The photography. The scene when villain is killed. The reconciliation. The acting by Frank Mayo DIRECTION. Doesn't point any truths here and allows several scenes to become conventional. Obvious plotting all the way. As far as mechanics are concerned he has treated it well.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Use the title for a teaser campaign. Tell of the search for thrills by the youth of the day. Play up return of Beverly Bayne.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for average houses, small towns and neighborhoods. Title and cast should have drawing power in certain localities.

SUMMARY. Not much logic in this story—which caters to the thrills sought after by a flapper. Plot not well constructed in that characters are moved about without much motivation. Separation of parents and reconciliation worked out too abruptly. Fairly well acted.

THE CAST

Mary Rand	Beverly Bayne
John Rand	Frank Mayo
Henrietta Rand	Pauline Garon
Bruce Corbin	Bryant Washburn
Peggy D'Arcy	Carmelita Geraghty
Matt Rutherford	Ralph McCullough
Jimmy Wellington	Ernest Wood
Prosecuting Attorney	Lawrence Underwood
District Attorney	Jack Fowler
Harry Perrin	Walter Deming
Deacon Collins	James McElbern
Judge Ford	William McIllwain

By E. Grubb Alexander. Directed by Dallas Fitzgerald. Photographed by Milton Moore.

SYNOPSIS. Struggling minister accepts wife's offer that they should separate for the sake of their daughter—the wife taking up practise of law in which she becomes successful. Is elected district attorney and neglects the girl—with result that latter is tried for murder. She is saved from conviction. Parents are reconciled.

How Baxter Butted In

(Warner Bros.—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S a smart little picture which graces the silversheet here. Adapted by Owen Davis from Harold Titus' novel, "Stuff of Heroes," it affords an amusing hour in the way it has been seasoned with bright incident, comedy and pathos. The central idea built around a hero-worshipping clerk in the "want ad" department of newspaper who imagines himself executing all sorts of heroics gives Matt Moore fine opportunity to display his talent as a light comedian. No actor gracing the screen could have carried out the part any better. It is a "fat" role—one which might have been written for the movies with Moore in mind. And he is thoroughly in character. It is similar to the other character sketches which have brought the actor into the spotlight of popularity.

As the dreaming, wistful hero he longs to get on in the world and make a "go" out of it. So while working as a wage slave he dreams and the director using a variety of fade-ins and fade-outs capitalizes the illusions of the youth. While looking at a plate of soup the incident fades in on a shot of Baxter on a raft saving the heroine while shoving the villain overboard. The "boys in blue" steam up in time to rescue the sweethearts. Of such stuff is this picture made. While he is holding down his job his imagination takes him through one exciting adventure after another. The incident, the humor—and the ever-present pathos are nicely balanced by the director who never gets out of key with his subject matter. A few scenes he has gagged with the aid of the title writer, but the piece never becomes slapstick.

The hero is easily misunderstood and considered a perfect boob by most everyone except the girl. But in the end he is rewarded by the benevolent managing editor. He becomes a real hero when he rushes from a banquet to his home (which is afire) and rescues his sister-in-law's children and a litter of pups. The action never loses its spontaneity and the central figures never lose sympathy. When it is finished you will admit it is a bright little number. It is well acted and mounted in good style.

THEME. Light comedy of wage slave who dreams of doing heroic things. Misunderstood by everyone he makes good and proves himself a real hero. Is rewarded with love and advancement.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The variety of fade-ins and fade-outs. The humor in the scenes as hero imagines himself a hero. The human note. The pathos. The acting by Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore. The titles. The climax.

DIRECTION. Has shown deft treatment in taking slight story and sustaining it with neatly balanced scenes of pathos and humor. Shows some clever mechanical tricks. Gets good results all the way.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Title makes good material for teasing picture through program readers and newspaper paragraphs. Play up Matt Moore as acting an ideal role. Play up theme—of how dreams carry us on to accomplish big things, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Good enough for first runs. Suitable for any type of house as plot and characters are easily understood.

SUMMARY. A very enjoyable light comedy, made so by its well balanced humor and pathos. Is pointed with human touches which have been well thought out by director and players. Titles are bright and mounting is good. Has a good idea which has been finely treated.

American Pluck

(Chadwick—Five Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is no doubt about this being one of those "up and going" action pictures. There isn't a single pause from the moment that George Walsh comes on the scene as the reckless son of an indulgent parent and proceeds to show a lot of high-pressure dynamics. The role is a good one for the athletic stunt actor since he must go through plenty of adventurous excitement before he can make good with his dad. The plot isn't so new. It's that old favorite of the young scapegrace who is cast off by an irate father until he makes good. If the youth can return inside of a year with $5,000 he has earned he will be rewarded with a couple of extra ciphers added to the amount. There's the idea. Make the most of it.

Walsh is introduced as a college boy who gets into one tight scrape after another. When he has rescued a dazzling beauty from a cabaret which has been raided, the authorities expel him. He speeds like an Oldfield to reach his dad's western ranch—and certainly steps on it when making his departure. There are some exciting shots here as Walsh skids around corners on two wheels.

It is pure fiction all the way and naturally is filled with hokum. But because of its snappy incident and action—to say nothing of its speed and suspense, there can be no doubt about its holding the interest. The youth has two objectives—one is to earn the $5,000—the other is to renew acquaintance with the girl. So hopping a side-door Pullman he bobs up in Galveston where he doubles for some local "pug" and wins the $5,000. He puts his rival to sleep with a crashing haymaker to the jaw and nearly takes the count himself when he spies the heroine among the spectators.

To keep the plot going the sponsors introduced the unconscious "pug" as dying from the blow, which compels the hero to make his escape with the aid of the heroine. Her identity is established. She is a princess of a mythical kingdom and the next seen of the young man he is saving her from various intrigues. Romance follows and so does the reconciliation with the father. The action covers a lot of ground, is well photographed and should please patrons not identified with the hard-boiled minority.

THEME. Romantic melodrama of youth who must earn stipulated sum of money in a year in order to be reconciled to his father. Makes good, wins a princess for a wife—and adds to his bank account.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The high-pressure incident, disclosing a lot of fast action with Walsh stepping on the gas, employing his fists and executing various stunts. The prize-fight. The motor car sequence. The cabaret scene. The atmosphere.

DIRECTION. Certainly keeps it keyed at high pitch—never allowing action to lose momentum. Covers up gaps in plot with speed—and suspense in the action. Mounts it in pleasing style.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tell about Walsh as one of the foremost stunt actors. Bill as fast-moving adventure story of ingenious American youth who always bests his opponents. Play up the pep and dash of action.

DRAWING POWER. For average houses. Suitable for downtown trade and small towns.

SUMMARY. A high-speed adventure story, chock-full of lively incident and action. Unreal of course but you won't mind that in view of the high jinks put over. Shows plenty of heroic stuff. Titles are bright and pithy-production is well mounted—and the players get everything out of it.

THE CAST

Blaze Derringer.....George Walsh
Princess Alicia.....Wanda Hawley
Count Birkhaff.....Sidney DeGrey

The Love Gamble

HERE is a story from the novel, "Peggy of Beacon Hill," well adapted to the screen by Harry O. Hoyt with a cast that could hardly have been improved upon. In the main many incidents of the story have been seen on the screen before, but in addition there are a number of new angles that brighten it up considerably and make of it a picture that can be well recommended. There are a number of unique angles and twists to it that make for suspense and hold the interest throughout.

Lillian Rich has the role of the Beacon Hill girl, who at the height of her depression at having to live with a domineering father, who does not understand her, inherits a thousand dollars, which she invests with success in a Boston Bohemian tea shop. There she falls in love with a visitor who keeps from her the fact that he is already married.

Their love develops and the girl is persuaded to go with him to his cabin in the mountains, where he reveals to her the fact that he is bound to an unfaithful wife. She spurns his further attentions and unknown to him makes her escape through a window at the height of a storm.

The same night his wife is found murdered in a hotel where she has registered for herself an dher husband. He is accused of the crime and the trial is held, unknown to the girl, who is ill through exposure in the storm and cared for in a cabin in the woods by a former sweetheart of his mother. She learns of the trial only as the case is about to go to the jury and arrives at the courtroom only in time to prove a complete alibi for him.

There are some highly interesitng scenes as the plot develops, with every role played to the best possible advantage. Robert Frazer plays opposite Miss Rich as the young husband who falls in love with her. It is a role that might easily be overplayed and the hero made to appear somewhat ridiculous in less capable hands. Brooks Benedict also does some clever work as the disappointed lover of Peggy.

THEME. Romantic melodrama of girl who sacrifices her own good name to save the man she loves from being found guilty of the crime of murder.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The scenes about the tea shop in Boston's Bohemian district. The sequence in which Frazer reveals to Miss Rich the fact that he is already a married man. The storm in which Miss Rich emerges into the night.

DIRECTION. The story was exceptionally well directed. At no time does the plot slacken and the most is had out of every sequence.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The exceptionally well balanced cast and the extremely fast moving story. The Bohemian atmosphere of the tea room. A teaser campaign as to what any person would do under the same conditions Miss Rich finds herself.

DRAWING POWER. Should please patrons in all types of houses. The story is one that will always have an appeal to all.

SUMMARY. An exceptionally good story with an equally good cast, well directed and acted in a manner that could hardly be improved upon. It has an abundance of action, humor and suspense.

THE CAST

Peggy Mason.....Lillian Rich
Douglas Wyman.....Robert Frazer
Jennie Howard.....Pauline Garon
Jim Mason, stepfather.....James Marcus
Jack Mason, brother.....Arthur Rankin
Joe Wheeler, Peggy's sweetheart.....Brooks Benedict

Jim Gordon.....Larry Steers

Fighting Courage

(Davis Dist. Div.—Five Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS Western is one of the series of eight Maynard productions starring Ken Maynard. If the others of the eight are of the same standard it should be a very interesting series. Maynard is seen to splendid advantage in this one, which has much fast action, good suspense, several thrills and enough of the comedy element to carry it along nicely.

Maynard could just about carry the picture himself, but he is favored by a good supporting cast, each member of which does his part well. In addition he has a story that is well above the average for these westerns, and he has a horse, Tarzan, that serves him well through many tough situations.

Maynard is the son of a wealthy easterner and incurs the displeasure of his father by too frequent hilarious escapades. The result is that father ships him off to the west, there to prove his worth by locating a lost mine whose whereabouts have been unsuccessfully sought for many years.

Arrived near his destination Maynard makes a swap with a stranger for the latters horse. It develops that this stranger is a much sought bandit, closely resembling Maynard in appearance. As he nears the town in which he is to make his headquarters he is discovered by a sheriff's posse and thinking it a holdup decides to make his escape. He is subjected to all sorts of thrilling episodes thereafter and is made to do some hazardous riding and other stunts to keep from being taken as the bandit. Even the father of the girl he loves recognizes him as the bandit and forbids the daughter having any communication with him.

Eventually Maynard succeeds in rounding up the real bandit and proving his entire innocence much to the satisfaction of all concerned. The map to the lost mine is also discovered in the bandit's clothes by the hero, so he succeeds in his mission.

THEME. Western melodrama in which the son of a wealthy easterner is ordered by his father to find a long lost mine, and thereby prove his worth. He is mistaken for a bandit, forced through many hardships, but eventually wins the girl he loves and succeeds in locating the mine.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The thrilling riding of Maynard and the exploits of his wonderfully trained horse, Tarzan. The wild chase of the pursuing posse. The holdups and the appearance of the Hollywood Beauty Sextette.

DIRECTION. Clifford S. Elfelt has done a good piece of directing and gets full value of a story that is somewhat out of the ordinary.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The best bet in the exploitation line is the star and his horse, Tarzan. The many thrills provided in the picture. The Hollywood Beauty Sextette. The splendid all-around work of the competent cast.

DRAWING POWER. This should prove an exceptional attraction in any city where the picture theatre goers are partial to the western. There is enough action to keep them aroused from start to finish.

SUMMARY. A fast moving western very well acted, with thrills from start to finish and a touch of romance that makes for an extremely good story, well directed.

THE CAST

Regional News from Correspondents

Albany

ANOTHER theatre has decided to shorten its week during the summer season the Star in Greenwich now running on Thursday and Saturday nights only. The theatre is operated by Dennis Regan.

Fred Mausert, who is building a new theatre in Glens Falls that will seat about 1,400 and which will be located next door to the Rialto has ordered a couple of new Simplex machines and is rushing the work in order that the house may be in shape to open in time for the fall business. Another new theatre is being constructed in Lake Placid by the Adirondack Theatre Corporation. The house will seat about 1,000 persons. The front will be of tapestry brick and there will be two covered exits for patrons in rainy weather.

With cooler weather, business picked up during the past week in this part of the state. In some of the larger theatres, the second shows drew capacity crowds, but the first shows still continue to be small on account of the effects of daylight saving.

Jacob Golden, manager of the Griswold theatre in Troy, returned last week from Providence, R. I., where he officiated as best man at a wedding in that city.

The Empire theatre in Syracuse is displaying a sign above its ticket window, which reads as follows: "Read your ticket and count your change." The Syracuse theatres featured the Poughkeepsie boat races during the week on account of the fact that the Syracuse crew was one of the participants.

W. F. Seymour, of New York city, eastern division manager for the Producers' Distributing Corporation, was in town during the week, going over matters with Robert Mochrie, the local manager. The week also brought to town Fred J. McConnell, general manager of short subjects for Universal, who had a conference with the local sales force on serials.

According to all reports reaching Film Row, there was quite a fire in the theatre which L. L. Connors runs in Cambridge. Mr. Connors was on an automobile trip at the time but hurried home as soon as he learned of the fire.

Irving Thalberg, one of the production heads at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

H. C. Bissell, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, has rented a summer home in the Helderbergs this year, but the way he is jumping over the state, he gets little benefit of the cooling breezes that sweeep over the mountain tops.

Among the visitors in town during the week were Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward; J. D. Burnham, of Ogdensburg; Earl Flack, of Potsdam, and Tom Thornton, of Saugerties. Mr. Flack appeared before the Film Board of Trade in connection with a rather unusual matter which he was seeking to adjust. It appears that Mr. Flack's theatre was sold without his knowledge, to his competitor, leaving Mr. Flack high and dry and without any house in which to play the pictures which he had booked. Mr. Flack's contention before the Film Board of Trade was to the effect that he should be released from his contracts. Mr. Flack was ruled against, however, on the ground that he had signed the contract for the pictures and would be held to play or pay for the same.

It certainly looked like old times the other day to see Fred Elliott, former owner of the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, chatting with W. H. Linton, of Utica, another old timer in the business, who quit for a time, but who is now back and about to build a new theatre in Utica. Mr. Linton dropped in to town on his way to New York and said that the new Olympic, which will seat 1,100, and which will replace the one that was burned eleven days after it was opened, will be ready about September 15. Mr. Linton has formed a stock company to finance the new theatre, his son, E. W. Linton, being treasurer. The force of builders will work day and night under specially constructed arc lights in order that the house may be opened in time to catch the fall business.

Jack Little, a vaudeville headliner and a son-in-law of Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal theatre in Albany, has recovered after a considerable spell at one of the local hospitals. Mr. Hellman was worried over his son-in-law's illness and spent his time alternating between the theatre and the hospital.

The Colonial, in Utica, a Robbins house, has closed for the summer. The Avon, in Watertown, another Robbins house, which has been playing stock for several weeks, switched back to pictures last week, the stock company having failed to draw as well as expected.

Charles Seasonske, owner of the Grand in Johnstown, arrived in town last Wednesday, to find about everyone attending the circus. There was nothing for Mr. Sesonske to do but to follow suit and making up a party which included Leon Medem, Edward Hochstim and Jack Stuab, all connected with the Pathe exchange, and Walter Suckno, owner of the Albany and Regent theatres, Mr. Sesonske journeyed out to the big tent where the party drank a gallon or more of pink lemonade, fed the elephants and had the time of their lives.

James Rose has no intention of shortening his weeks. In fact, according to Mr. Rose, his house will remain open as long as he has a dime, and as Mr. Rose is generally conceded to have several dimes, his theatres will keep right on operating seven days a week.

All exhibitors in the Albany Zone will receive letters this week from the headquarters in this city, calling attention to the fact that the office is being run for the convenience of the exhibitors, and urging them to avail themselves of the many advantages offered. The Film Board of Trade is planning to hold an outing in the near future, the arrangements being in the hands of J. H. MacIntvre, local manager for Famous Players. From now on through the summer the Board will meet once a month on the Monday nearest to the fifteenth, while the Arbitration Board will meet monthly on the Monday nearest to the twenty-second of the month.

Frank Hickey, who served as auditor for Farash Theatres, Inc., has been installed as the new manager of the Strand theatre in Schenectady. W. W. Farley has named Mr. Gildersleeve of Kingston to handle his Community theatre in Catskill. Mr. Farley has decided to run both houses in Catskill this summer, but in Schenectady he will be guided by the weather in regard to closing one of the three theatres there for the summer, as a means of diverting more business to the other two. Mr. Farley will maintain his headquarters in Albany.

Workmen have started redecorating and otherwise improving the American theatre in Troy, which is now included in the Strand group of houses, of which Uly S. Hill is managing director. No one has yet been selected to handle the American and it is quite possible that on account of its proximity to the Troy theatre that no one will be named as manager, but that the house will be looked after by Walter Roberts and Benjamin Stern, with Mr. Hill supervising

Tony Veiller, manager of the Lincoln theatre in Troy, and who is managing the campaign for the Greater Movie Season in the Albany Zone, met with the exhibitors of Albany on Monday morning, and discussed the proposition, outlining his plans. He held a similar meeting with the Troy exhibitors on Monday afternoon and on Tuesday morning met with the exhibitors in Schenectady. Mr. Veiller plans to send a form letter to the 400 or more exhibitors in the Albany Zone, setting forth what the exhibitors are planning to do in the bigger cities and suggesting to exhibitors in the smaller places that they enter into the plan.

A son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Milligan, of Schuylerville, well known exhibitors, is now pitching for the Baltimore Orioles, enjoying the distinction of having broken into League ball immediately after leaving college.

After having been closed for several weeks, the Pember theatre in Granville has reopened with Vincent Dailey, of New York city as its manager. Considerable money has been spent in redecorating the house and in the installation of new projection machines and other equipment. The theatre will operate on Wednesday and Saturday evenings during the summer months.

Hot or cold, it's the old same to Robert Denton, owner of the Capitol theatre in Elizabethtown, for Mr. Denton runs an ice business as well as the theatre, and where the loses on one he gains on the other.

Victor Warren, of Massena, one of the best known exhibitors along the northern border, recently purchased the site of a block that had been destroyed by fire and plans to erect a business block in the near future.

Detroit

SEEKING to attract greater summer business the Adams theatre in Detroit has slashed its regular prices in half for the warm months. The policy of first run pictures with a two hour programme is maintained.

George W. Trendle attorney for the Kunsky enterprises is now back at his desk following a business journey to New York in which he conferred with First National officials. Mr. Trendle is a First National director.

Bill Flemion, city sales manager for Standard Films, has just returned from a two weeks motor trip through Indiana and Ohio. His family accompanied him.

Exterior construction on the Grand Riviera Theatre, now being erected at Grand River and Joy avenues is practically completed. Interior decoration is already under way and it is planned to install equipment in the near future.

New York and New Jersey

THE Paramount Pep Club of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gave its annual outing Saturday at Indian Point on the Hudson River which was attended by over five hundred club members and their families. The features of the outing were the chartering of the Hudson River steamer Chauncey M. Depew, and the athletic games and prize awards following the supper served in the pavilion.

Coleman Bros. of New Jersey, operating the Regent at East Orange and the Scenario at Newark, are constructing two new theatres on Long Island. They are building a $175,000 house at St. Albans which will seat 1,200, and expect to have it ready for business in December. The other theatre is located at Springfield and will seat 800. This house will cost at least $90,000 and will be ready in September. Coleman Bros. were former owners of the Lafayette in New York and the Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y.

Ground was recently broken in Trenton for a handsome new 2,000 seat theatre at Olden and Walnut Aves. It will be called the Ten Eyck Gaiety and will be owned solely by George B. Ten Eyck and John V. Boyd. The architects are W. W. Slack and Son. The contractor, W. C. Ehret, has guaranteed to have the building completed and ready for business on Saturday, September the 5th. The Gaiety will be similar in construction to the Ten Eyck Orpheum and will have all the modern improvements, such as rest rooms, smoking room and reception lobby. There will also be an adequate stage for vaudeville which, in conjunction with motion pictures, will form the entertainment policy of the house. The Gaiety will have an electric sign patterned after the one now in front of the Orpheum.

The Loew - Metro - Goldwyn Baseball team is going along in great shape. On Saturday they trimmed the strong Universal outfit by the score of 12 to 6, the game being played at the Catholic Protectory Oval in the Bronx. Previously the Loew-Metro-Goldwyn team took the decision from Pathe and Warner Brothers. Willie Borack pitched all three games and did much to bring victory to his team. Arthur Loew has proved the "Babe Ruth" of the Metro-Goldwyn team and in Saturday's game poled a smashing two bagger to deep right that scored two runs. He whaled a homer against Pathe.

On Saturday, July 4, at the same grounds, the Loew-Metro-Goldwyn team hooks up with the Famous Players nine. A great battle is anticipated.

West Coast Theatres Opens Picture Palace

Long Beach, Cal., House Has 2,300 Seating Capacity; Beautiful in Design and Appointment

A MAGNIFICENT motion picture theatre has recently been opened by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., at Long Beach, Cal. This new show place, which is one of the latest additions to the West Coast Theatres' rapidly increasing circuit, has a seating capacity of 2,300 and has facilities of the most modern type in every department.

Among the prominent features in this house are a Wurlitzer three-manual orchestral pipe organ; expensive opera chairs and large leather loge-divans; projection equipment of the very latest type; stage equipment that is claimed to be without peer in any theatre in the country; a modern ventilating system; lighting effects that can be operated both from the stage and the booth, on many circuit dimmers, giving any desired effect; and a decorative scheme which is pronounced by critics as one of the most beautiful in any Western theatre.

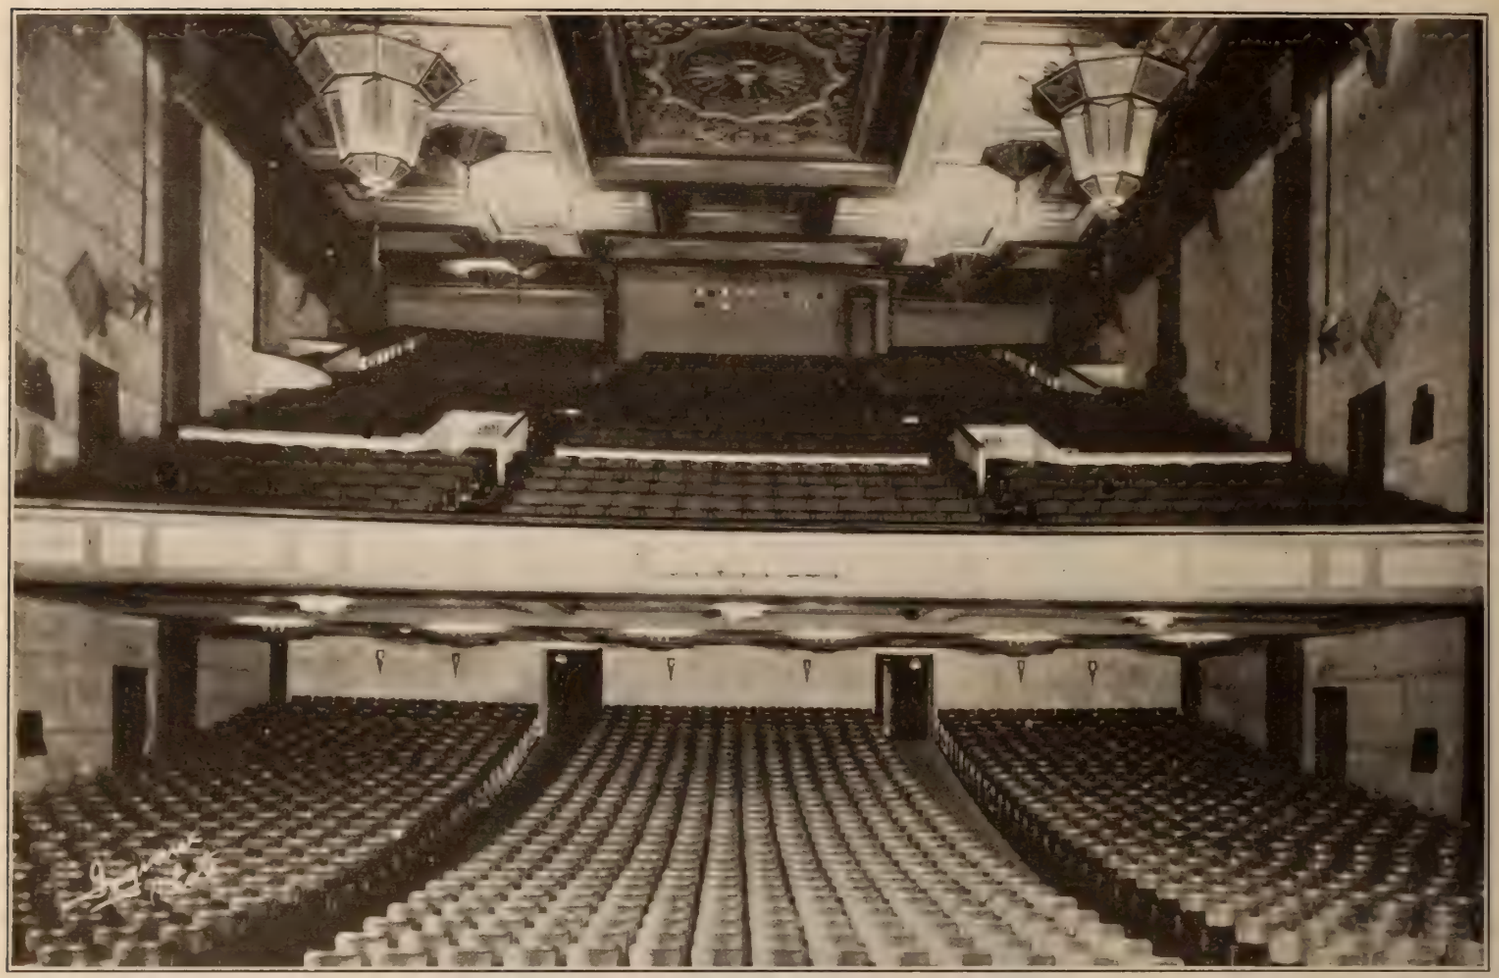
The theatre is under the resident managership of Frank L. Browne, widely-known Long Beach theatrical executive, who, prior to assuming charge of the new house, operated the Liberty Theatre in that city for several years for the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and who will continue to manage both houses. The Long Beach houses are under the direct personal supervision of A. M. Bowles, General Manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

A fourteen-piece orchestra will be a part of the regular staff, and the policy calls for a split-week change, with the fore part of the week being devoted to big pictures and elaborate stage presentations produced by Fanchon and Marco, widely known Pacific Coast stage producers, who have charge of the Production Department of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. The latter part of the week will be devoted to standard big-time Orpheum Vaudeville, and pictures.

Long Beach is a city of 125,000 inhabitants, and the new West Coast Theatre is the finest playhouse in that city, as well as one of the most beautiful on the Pacific Coast.

It will be noted in the accompanying photographs that the furnishings, tapestries, carpeting, and other similar accoutrements are exceedingly attractive.

The architectural treatment of this theatre incorporates several innovations in theatrical design and decoration. It offers an additional example of the architectural achievements that are being continuously made in the construction of motion picture theatres.



Seven thousand people attended the gala opening, and among the prominent visitors present were all of the high officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., as well as prominent Long Beach citizens, headed by Mayor Clark, who was the principal speaker on the program.

G. E. Designs New Switch for Motion Picture Theatres

A new throw-over switch, which has been given the designation CR-7896-M1, is now being marketed by the General Electric Company for use in automatically transferring lighting circuits to an emergency source. Such a switch would find its principal use in theatres, motion picture houses and other public gathering places where an emergency lighting system for exit lights is required for use when the normal lighting supply fails.

It is impossible, with this switch, for alternating current to be thrown on the battery usually employed as the emergency source of supply. In designing the switch to prevent this, exceptionally wide gaps were arranged between the contact tips, thus preventing the arc from holding over and throwing alternating and direct current together.

The new switch has a tip capacity of 30 amperes and may be used on circuits as high as 440 volts. It is mounted on a compound base and enclosed in a sheet metal case for wall mounting. The approximate overall dimensions of the enclosing case are 14 inches high, 8½ inches wide and 7½ inches deep. Knock-outs are provided at the t p and bottom for conduit wiring.

Suspension of Operators Discussed at Canada Convention

THE arbitrary suspension of motion picture operators came up for lengthy discussion before the recent annual convention of District No. 11 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes which was held in the Chateau Laurier at Ottawa. It was pointed out that one union projectionist was suspended by a Government inspector because he had reading matter in the projection room. On another occasion an operator was chewing the butt of an unlighted cigarette when the government inspector made a call and the operator was summarily suspended regardless of explanations.

The outcome of the discussion was the adoption of a resolution asking the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress to secure legislation in the various Canadian Provinces providing for stiff requirements in the qualifications for theatre inspectors, a definite standard of experience and knowledge to be designated.

W. P. Covert of Toronto, International vice-president of the I.A.T.S.E., was re-elected president of District No. 11 while P. J. Ryan of Montreal was re-elected secretary-treasurer. Every organized theatre centre in Ontario and Quebec had projection machine operator representatives at the convention with the exception of Fort William and Brantford, Ontario. The cities represented included Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, London, Hamilton, Quebec, Kingston, Peterboro, Brockville, Windsor, Sudbury, and others.

The delegates held a big dinner at Aylmer, Quebec, as a feature of the convention. It was more than usually enjoyable for the simple reason that not one speech was permitted.

Marr & Colton Installed in New So. California Theatre

Fullerton, California has something else to be proud of now besides climate, Valencia oranges, and beautiful homes. Southern California was given a gasp of surprise when it attended the opening of the Chapman Theatre. To begin with, its new theatre is located on Spadia Road just north of Chapman Avenue. It is a huge building, as fireproof as modern construction can provide, with a main auditorium and a balcony with a seating capacity for 1200 persons.

The proscenium arch and stage are examples of the highest in art and efficiency. On either side of the stage is a highly decorative theme, including the shuttered opening of the Marr & Colton organ chambers. This has been treated with the utmost care and originality and embraces not only the Italian motif but rare color and lighting effects.

The foyer and mezzanine lounge are also very striking. One enters the foyer from the main court, through massive, quaint doors of oldiron. Genuine oriental rugs take the place of the usual padded carpets.

The Marr & Colton organ is one of the feature attractions. This organ is being played by the well known musician, Julius Johnson,—a master organist.

The organ is of the modern orchestral type, played from the 3 Manual Console.

Inquiries and Comments

Compact Portable Generating Outfit

PIONEER days in the moving picture industry, as typified by the traveling show, with its one night stands, and the "nickelodeon" with its more pretentious quarters in a made-over barroom, bring back fond memories of such things as hand-cranked projectors with the "fillum" piling out in a waste paper basket or on the floor of the booths, the one and only "silver sheet," the gum-chewing pianist with enthralled gaze riveted on the screen, the many broken promises of features to come and the time-worn excuse, made at the last minute to a packed house, that the feature of the evening had been "delayed in transit" and would surely be presented "tomorrow."

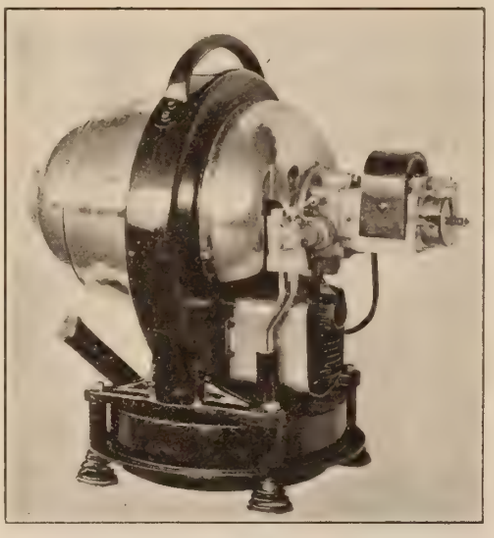
Because we can remember such things it is easier to comprehend the progress which has been made in the past few years.

The traveling show and the nickelodeon differed in practically only one respect. The latter had a reasonably certain supply of "juice" whereas the former never knew what it would have to use next. Indeed, it was frequently necessary in the more sparsely settled communities to resort to calcium to put the picture across.

The nickelodeon has been replaced by more pretentious structures of a permanent nature but the traveling show is still necessary to provide the isolated communities with entertainment.

The passing years, however, have witnessed the demise of the old methods and the substitution of more convenient and reliable ones of presenting the show. No longer need the "Juice" be taken as it comes —A.C. here, D.C. there—110 in one place, 220 in the next—with the chance on the side of having none at all.

Portable power plants of sufficient capacity to supply the needs of one projector are now available which eliminate this possibility. There are many such plants in existence, all of which possess merits in their own way. Too meet the requirements of the traveling show, however, an outfit of this type must be portable in the broadest sense of the word and yet possess sufficient capacity to do the work.



It is fortunate that the capacity need not be uncommonly great since the traveling show ordinarily caters to small audiences and is staged in small auditoriums where the throw is relatively short and the picture small. Compactness then becomes the primary requisite in the portable plant.

Such a compact outfit is admirably represented by the Homelite generating plant, made and marketed by the Homelite Corporation of America. It is illustrated in Fig. 1 which shows the complete generating unit minus storage batteries, exhaust line and muffler.

This outfit consists essentially of a six pole shunt wound, 32 volt, D-C generator driven by a two cycle, one cylinder gas engine, direct connected to the armature shaft. The entire outfit weighs about 100 lbs and is provided with a hand grip for carrying it short distances. While a weight of 100 lbs. is not to be lightly tossed about or lugged like a suitcase for many miles at a time, still it can be easily placed in the smallest automobile and carried in and out of the building where the pictures are to be projected.

600-Watt Capacity

The capacity of this machine, while nominally rated at 500 watts, is capable of delivering from 600 to 700 watts continuously without overheating. Such a capacity (aside from the voltage) would practically preclude the use of any arc, even the reflector type but it is sufficient to meet the requirements of the 600 watt, 20 ampere, 30 volt incandescent lamp for motion picture service.

(Fig. 1) Motor generator of 600 watt capacity that is actually portable.

This lamp was especially designed for semiprofessional service where the throw is short (50-70 ft.) and the picture is small (9-12 ft. wide). When using the 600 watt lamp with the Homelite outfit it will be necessary to use a small hand-controlled resistance to keep the lamp at 20 amperes.

It is possible, however, in an emergency to throw the lamp directly across the generator terminals, using an extra length of feeder wire to take up the excess voltage and so run the lamp at approximately 30 volts directly from the generator.

Automatic Voltage Control

Better still, the unit is equipped with an automatic voltage control, in the form of a solenoid which operates on the spark control of the gas engine and so regulates the speed of the generator, which in turn controls its terminal voltage.

This arc control is fairly affective and can be set for any value between 30 and 40 volts by means of a simple adjustment on the solenoid.

Compactness in the machine is secured by using a magneto, instead of a battery for ignition and by having the gas engine air-cooled instead of water-cooled.

Uses Gasoline, Kerosene or Furnace Oil

An important feature with this unit is the fact that either gasoline, kerosene or furnace oil can be used with equal success as a fuel. Operation on furnace oil, is naturally quite inexpensive, the cost per KW-M being in the neighborhood of 5 or 6 cents. Furthermore, where furnace oil is used as a fuel no additoinal oil is required for lubrication purposes since the machine is then self oiling.

When using the other fuels, however, the manufacturers recommend placing 6 oz. of motor oil in the gasoline tank after which the machine does the rest.

The capacity of the fuel tank (in the base of the machine) is one gallon which is sufficient to operate the engine for about 4 hrs. A fine mesh screen is placed in the mouth of the tube leading to the carburetor and the manufacturers say that it is possible to fill the tank one-quarter with water and three-quarters with fuel without affecting the operation of the unit.

Four spiral springs, acting as a base for the machine, take up all vibration so that it is possible to place it on a table without causing the table to vibrate, or the machine to creep.

When cleaning the combustion chamber of carbon it is not necessary to take down the engine since the chamber can be cleaned through the exhaust and spark plug ports with the aid of special tools supplied. This requires five minutes.

In cranking the engine, a short of piece of clothesline is wound around a grooved pulley at one end of the shaft and the cord is then pulled quickly, thus turning over the engine. This operation is similar to winding a cord on a top, preparatory to spinning it.

According to the manufacturers, the machine is practically fool-proof and will stand much abuse. Other than filling the tank with fuel, it will run without attention for long periods.

Liberty Theatre in Spokane Undergoing Remodeling

Approximately $25,000 will be spent on the Liberty Theatre in Spokane, Wash., this spring in the remodeling and renovating of the house, according to announcements made last week by Manager Ray Grombacher. Included among the plans of remodeling are the installation of a beautiful Italian theatre interior, with an Italian garden at the stage and a similar effect in the foyer of the house, as well as the redecorating and renovating of all walls, drapes and lounging rooms. The new interior work is being done under the direction of Madama LadaVeze, well-known Washington decorator and designer.

Mr. Grombacher has just completed the remodeling of his Casino Theatre in that city, at a cost of several thousand dollars. The repairs in that house included the furnishing of the theatre with entirely new hangings, draperies, stage drapes and carpets, as well as the redecorating and renewing of the interior of the theatre and its equipment.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Black Cyclone"—Pathe, Rialto, Los Angeles

Express: "If you have a hankering to see a motion picture that is out of the ordinary and one that is packed with romance and thrills, glance at 'Black Cyclone' at the Rialto. It is a truly remarkable film. Rex, who performed so creditably as the equine hero of 'King of Wild Horses,' is cast as the principal character in 'Black Cyclone' and he carries the honors with the aplomb of a matinee idol."

Times: "Rex, the wild horse, runs away with film honors on the rialto and at the Rialto this week. 'Black Cyclone' is a new thrill for the tired picturegoer. 'Black Cyclone' provides magnificent entertainment. One, never for a moment sees the human guiding hand. Marvelously beautiful horses (and just the sight of a horse is a treat nowadays anyway) battle for the love of a beautiful mare. The storm and stress of animal conflict runs all through the picture."

Herald: "'Black Cyclone' at the Rialto presents an interesting study in the extent of intelligence a dumb animal will manifest without the adjunct of human guidance. Of course there were trainers on the sidelines, giving instructions to Rex, Lady and the Killer, the three beautiful horses featured in the film but to all appearances, they were acting of their own volition. Suffice it to say, the production is well put on and interesting throughout."

"The Lost World"—First National Grauman's Million Dollar; L. A.

Examiner: "Cinema celebrities paid homage last night to initiative and ingenuity. In attending en masse the opening of "The Lost World," the notables of screenland gave their tribute to mechanical art and science, and to something quite new in the making of photoplays. No famed beauty or idol of the fans has ever received greater attention than that bestowed by wondering and amazed crowds as the parade of prehistoric animals marched across the screen. No impassioned love story or the domestic complications has ever intrigued an audience more keenly than did this strange tale."

Times: "The season for new faces on the screen has at last reached its summit. In 'The Lost World' there must be nearly a hundred who have seldom before been seen in the films, but that doesn't make their debut any the less thrilling. 'The Lost World' has been one of the most widely heralded of the screen's features, and it is one of the most amazing that has ever been shown. Probably more than any other picture that has ever been made, 'The Lost World discloses the cleverist film technical devices and the magic of the camera. It is far and away the most adventurous feature that I have ever seen."

Herald: "Whether fantasy or freak, 'The Lost World' is astoundingly fascinating. The picture had the crowd going. For 'The Lost World' discloses the usual production. The narrative is made attractive to the eye by virtue of real people figuring in the thrilling episodes. You get more out of the hour and a half of the film than books would import to you in a lifetime.' The picture is, perhaps, the most novel and at the same time the weirdest ever made."

Record: "To the eye of the camera all things are possible. Thus 'The Lost World' shows huge monsters of millions of years ago moving about so naturally that the picture might well be called 'Haunts and Habits of the Brontosaurus.' It is little short of marvelous what has been done with these prehistoric monsters. A compelling example of good workmanship, 'The Lost World' is a novelty that you won't want to miss. The picture boasts a cast that will be difficult to improve upon, but the real stars of the picture are little Freddy Brontosarus, Joan Dinosaur and Jimmy Allosaurs. Their first screen appearance, and they already loom above any star on the horizon."

Express: "An exceptional fantasy. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's story becomes doubly interesting in celluloid. 'The Lost World' has thrilling dramatic action in abundance and clever moments of comedy. Too much praise cannot be given to Harry O. Hoyt, director, and Willis O'Brien, who invented the creatures which appear so lifelike on the screen."

Daily News: "'The Lost World' is a remarkable photoplay. Of course, the tricks of the camera have been resorted to, to make the picture, but these tricks defy detection and so marvelously are the animals constructed that to all appearances they are alive. In fact, so well is the picture done, it is only by an effort of the mind that one realizes the animals are artificial."

"The Lost World"—First National New Gallery Kinema—London, Eng.

The Express: "The Lost World, is a goldmine for First National."

The Daily Chronicle: "A great popular success."

Sunday Pictorial: "A thing of fascinating originality."

The Sunday Express: "It is certainly one of the most completely satisfying entertainments ever shown."

The final safeguard for success—

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

GRETA NISSEN

Greta Nissen is handsome, capable and understanding. She is a real "find" both as to looks and to acting ability.—N.Y. Sun.

Miss Nissen is an exquisite and vibrant young creature, half the childlike ingenue and half the wise, sophisticated continental. The combination is irresistible. She is by all odds the screen's most captivating recent acquisition.—N.Y. Herald Tribune.

She is a Scandinavian with a Parisian cachet. She is fair, sure, natural and graceful. She is alert and seemingly gives as much attention to her hands and feet as she does to her constantly changing gaze. She has a decided and delightful personality. No matter how frivolous the scenes may be, Miss Nissen gives a sincere and earnest portrayal, always obtaining excellent results with an originality rarely beheld on the screen.
—N.Y. Times.

Miss Nissen is a glamorous young blonde whose radiant good looks survive on the screen. Certainly she is the most decorative thing in many months of super-spectacles.—N.Y. World.

Miss Nissen is what Webster must have thought of when he put that word "beautiful" in his dictionary. As an actress and as an optical treat, she is probably as big an acquisition as the screen has made this year. She deports herself attractively. She has an expressive face, and not the dumb-doll appearance of some other screen beauties. And she can wear clothes as well as any other woman on the screen.—Variety.

Miss Nissen has caused nothing short of a furore in the film world. The consensus seems to be that she is the most colorful and interesting beauty that has appeared on the picture horizon in many moons.
—Motion Pictures Today.

Miss Nissen appears in these GREATER FORTY releases:

It Might Be Interesting

There has been such tall talk about coming product from the film studios that adjectives have gone on strike. Paramount now has a statement to make that it would like to enforce on the minds of exhibitors. It concerns the first six pictures of the Greater 40 — pictures that have been completed and screened. They are:

"The Lucky Devil"

"Wild Wild Susan"

"WILD HORSE MESA"

"The COAST OF FOLLY"

"The Street of Forgotten Men"

"NIGHT LIFE OF NEW YORK"

About these six pictures you can set this down as true:

The industry has never been provided with better entertainment . . .

GREATER MOVIE SEASON

Richard Dix in "The Lucky Devil" begins where other auto-race dramas left off. He's a lucky devil not to have been killed. If you can see it and not gasp, you're thrill-deaf. If you can see it and not enjoy it, you're cuckoo.

Member Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.—Will H. Hays, President.

To Read This All through

Allan Dwan's direction of Rod La Rocque, Ernest Torrence, Dorothy Gish in "Night Life," his manipulation of the camera, his flair for getting the true essence of New Yorkitis into a fast, funny, appealing every-foot-an-entertainment picture will not be surpassed this year.

"The Street of Forgotten Men." How shall we describe it and what Herbert Brenon has made in this picture? You can offer money back to any one who can see this picture and not feel the thrill of it, the so-hard-to-catch heart tug of it, the powerful punch of its story and scenes. And if you want to hear of a new real star, remember the name Mary Brian.

"Wild Horse Mesa" was shown at a preview. Often it has been said of previews that "the audience cheered." But here is a case where they really did, not once but in many places during the picture. There has never been a better Zane Grey. The picture is a mop-up and when you see it, you'll admit it.

"Wild Wild Susan" offers the speedy comedy romance that makes this sextette of hits one of infinite variety. It's funny, it appeals to all classes, it is entertainment, it has a great plot and Bebe Daniels is in a part she simply eats alive — with Rod La Rocque as great support.

"The Coast of Folly." And now how can this Swanson epic be described? How can we convince you that you have never seen a better Swanson picture—more luxury, more gowns, more romance, more beauty, more marvelous acting? The surest way is to wait until you see it yourself. In the meantime, set this down: you can mop-up with Gloria Swanson in " The Coast of Folly " beyond the shadow of a doubt.

The woods are full of tall talk — so many titles, so many claims, so many would-be stars, so much extravagance, so many adjectives.

BUT OUT OF THE SMOKE AND THE CAMOUFLAGE AND THE HEAVY ARTILLERY ADVERTISING COMES THIS FACT:

The Greater Forty will make more money and please more people for you than any pictures ever produced, and that's the truth!

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE HATE MONOPOLY AND monopolists.

THEY HAVE FOUGHT, BLED AND DIED TO DO AWAY with oppression in all of its forms. They have fought for liberty in every war this country has entered since the Revolution.

FROM SCHOOLDAYS EVERY AMERICAN HAS BEEN taught fair play, liberty, freedom. It is the basic structure of their lives and their characters.

THEY WILL JOIN YOU IN A WAR TO THE DEATH against unfairness, trickiness, threats, bluffs, oppression and greed.

BUT YOU'VE GOT TO TELL THEM WHAT'S GOING ON before they will know of the necessity of a fight.

TELL THEM.

TELL THEM ON SLIDES. TELL THEM ON YOUR PROgrams, if you use any. Tell them through the columns of your local newspapers. Tell them by word of mouth. Tell them in every possible and conceivable manner.

TELL THEM OF THE DESPERATE ATTEMPT THAT IS being made to crush the theatre owner. If you have ever been threatened by any producer, tell them about it. If someone has threatened

ut The Fight You Are een Independence!

Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corp.)

to build a theatre to compete with you because you refused to pay ruinous prices for his pictures, tell them.

TELL THEM WHAT WILL HAPPEN TO THEIR MOST popular form of entertainment if it ever falls into the hands of a limited number of producers. Tell them what kind of pictures they would get if the ideas for pictures were to come from a small group of men who had no competition to spur them on.

TELL THEM HOW YOU HAVE WORKED AND SLAVED and schemed to give them the greatest possible show for their money. Tell them of the actions of the Monopoly Twins who openly and boastfully state that they have untold millions of dollars with which to lick the Independents.

TELL THEM THAT NOT A SINGLE FORWARD STEP HAS been made in this industry except under the lash of keen but open and honest competition. They know these things as a general principle but they don't know that an attempt is being made to monopolize their favorite entertainment.

SINCE THE DAY I STARTED IN THIS BUSINESS ABOUT 19 years ago, I have made it a point to tell you the truth about everything that was going on in the industry. It has been a good thing for you and it has paid me. It has made a strong bond between us. Build up that same kind of a bond between yourself and your people. And begin NOW.

"Just tell him
I'm from Metro-Goldwyn-

"We've got a line-up of pictures for 1925-26 that even beats our record of this year. If you'll let me show you some of our money winners
I think you'll agree that we've again!"

"You bet I'm interested in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.
You fellows certainly delivered the goods
this year. I've read a lot about Metro-Goldwyn-
Mayer's Quality 52 and it sounds good to me."

"We've got the stars that stand them up. And they're directed by the men who make the big box-office successes. For instance: Rex Ingram, Fred Niblo, Victor Seastrom, Marshall Neilan, Erich von Stroheim, Tod Browning, Hobart Henley, Frank Borzage, King Vidor, Rupert Hughes, Monta Bell, Robert Z. Leonard, W. Christy Cabanne, Jack Conway, Alf Goulding, and others. Those boys know what brings in the crowds. And when you figure that Louis B. Mayer and his lieutenants Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf head the studio organization you're sure of business pictures. And then there's Erté, the most famous fashion designer in the world, giving 'em knock-out gowns - and Technicolor as added attraction in many pictures and other showmanship ideas up our sleeve. And when it comes to promotion our Trans-continental Trackless Train, now a sensation on its way across country, is just one of the big ideas we've got. I'm going to show you what's in this book!"

"The Iron Mule"

One of only two two-reel comedies to play the big Capitol Theatre, New York, in two years.

If judged by the applause of the audience, however, first honors of the Old Mill bill go to "The Iron Mule," an Al St. John comedy which burlesques the operation of a passenger train in 1830. From the moment the engineer shoos away the chickens that have gone to roost on the locomotive to the final episode, where the monocled Englishman's deadly aim with a golf ball repels the scalp-hunting Redskins, the picture is one of the funniest ever presented in Dallas ***

VOL. XXXII NEW YORK, JULY 18, 1925 NO. 3

"Putting It Over"

SOME figures have recently come to mé son the losses taken in the forced runs of certain big pictures at legitimate theatres in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston.

The figures are scandalous. From every angle of consideration, it seems to me, they ought to sweep finally this scheme into the discard and bury it beyond any hope of resurrection.

The idea back of this method of presentation is—we assume—advertising. It is designed to create newspaper publicity, to impress heavily all the picture houses of the country from whom, later on, must come the rentals that pay the heavy cost of production and the heavy loss of the Broadway premiere.

Let us take one of these pictures. It is admittedly one of the best of all recent productions.

Well, this one picture lost so much in the Eastern cities—in its legitimate theatre runs, that without indicating the exact amount we can make these significant comparisons:

The loss was more, much more, than one-third of the whole year's national advertising campaign in magazines and newspapers of a prominent picture company. Just think of it! A forced run of one picture in four cities (and the resultant publicity, whatever it was) as against the continuous and prominent advertising in every city and town of the country of a brand name and a whole year's output.

Let us make some more advertising comparisons, selecting two great advertising successes whose national appropriations are close to the top of the list of the big national advertisers.

The loss (or, if you wish, the preliminary advertising expense) on the one picture was nearly one-third of the amount spent in the nation's newspapers last year by the Ford Motor Company. It was more than one-third as great as the entire year's newspaper campaign of Proctor and Gamble, whose products are household words.

The plain truth is that it is utterly unscientific—from an advertising standpoint—and prodigally wasteful. Consider what could be done with this large amount of money in straight newspaper advertising.

Full pages, if desired, but at any rate the heaviest kind of advertising could be run for an ample length of time in all the key cities of the country. Timed with the showing of the picture in picture theatres with large seating capacities and popular prices, the picture would cash in on the advertising for both exhibitor and producer; and advertising would at the same time prevail for all subsequent runs throughout each territory. In other words, here's your whole national advertising campaign on a big picture, ample in amount, scientifically expended, profitable in results. As against a dead loss, most of it going out in theatre rental.

Occasionally a picture will make money in its legitimate theatre run. But, how rarely! If so, it is good business and good advertising. But surely, by this time we know that it is only a super-attraction for which the public will pack a house at high prices.

The idea seems to be a persistent fetish, bred in the days of "Quo Vadis" and "Birth of a Nation," and when such pictures were marvels to the public mind.

We are getting picture advertising closer and closer to the point where it will rank with the well considered and conducted campaigns used for other commodities. Even the bosses today are keeping their hands off and letting specialists attend to it. So, there's hope: but not until we stop this wild, hysterical effort to "put it over" regardless of money, good taste, good judgment or any consequences and cost whatever.

Subsidy in England?

A DECIDED turn of events in the British film situation occurred last week when Stanley Baldwin, the Premier, indicated in the House of Commons that the time had come for the Government to come to the aid of the collapsed British producing industry.

What he said was part of general remarks as to the fact "that some industries seem beaten down to the point of helplessness," and he went on to suggest that they be subsidized.

With specific reference to motion pictures, the Premier declared: "I think the time has come when the position of the film industry in this country should be examined to see whether it is desirable on national grounds to see that the larger proportion of films exhibited in this country are British, having regard to the enormous power which the film is developing for propaganda purposes and the danger to which we in this country and our Empire subject ourselves if we allow that method of propaganda to be entirely in the hands of foreign countries."

Just what definite steps, if any, are to be taken has not yet been indicated. It is obvious, however, that this latest development is the result of agitation which has been going on for some time, openly or otherwise, against the supremacy of the American picture in Britain.

It is perfectly true that the British producing industry could be revived through subsidy, but to what extent remains to be seen. The making of successful pictures is not, and cannot be, brought about by legislation or Governmnetal action. They come only through picture-making ability and as a result of years of experience.

It is not the American producers who have forced American pictures on the British public; the public itself has elected them for the very apparent reason that the product is superior. This situation, obviously, cannot be changed except through the offering of much superior product from some other quarter. Anything else would of course mean a decrease in attendance at British theatres, which would then, presumably, complain because their business was being seriously injured. The Government would then be on the other horn of the dilemma, and would, it looks from this distance, be up against popular clamor.

The situation will be watched with great interest in this country, but at the moment it appears that Government subsidy would only be one necessary factor in the revival of the British industry.

Beating the Summer Slump

SOME timely suggestions are given by Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatre department, on ways to beat the summer slump. The article appeared in "The Close-Up," and follows in part:

"Experience has proved that the summer theatre can be put over if the manager maps out a plan to beat the summer competition and carries out that plan with determination. At this time of the year the theatre should be most comfortable, and that means the ventilating system should operate with 100 per cent efficiency. Cleanliness must be apparent, in every nook and corner of the theatre and in the personal appearance of the entire staff. Summer uniforms as adopted for the Class A theatres carry out the idea of summer coolness and cleanliness. Lighting is an important factor in making the theatre cool and attractive. Avoid warm and glowing lights. A very light green or blue can do wonders towards suggesting an atmosphere of comfort and coolness.

"Seasonal comfort can be suggested in the colors that are used by the sign painter. The basic idea is that color can influence through suggestion a very definite emotional state. Some colors bring comfort, others cause irritation. It is important for modern theatre managers to learn how to use some colors and how to avoid others. Experience has proved that red, orange or yellow are warm colors, while yellow-green, green and blue-green are cool colors which are quieting.

"For your musical program it is wise to avoid heavy and depressing numbers. Light, rapturous, flowing melodies are more suitable especially during the summer season."

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"Three cheers for Matrimony," shouts Maurice B. "Lefty" Flynn, F. B. O. star, who recently became the husband of dainty Viola Dana.

Li'l Junior Coughlan has an important part in "Mike" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer) which Marshall Neilan is producing on the coast.

Ford Sterling listens in while Malcolm St. Clair, director, discusses "The Trouble With Wives" (Paramount) with Ricardo Cortez who has hopped over from the "Not So Long Ago" (also Paramount) set.

ONE OF EUROPE'S BEST

THERE is a picture which has come out of Europe that compares favorably with anything produced here or over there. And it didn't come from Germany either. It is "Cyrano De Bergerac"—and was made in the studios of Italy and France by the Unione Cinematographica Italiana. The play by Rostand has endured ever since it was first produced. The title role affords the actor portraying it one of the greatest characterizations ever written. Mansfield, Coquelin and Walter Hampden have enacted "Cyrano"—the last-mentioned only last season.

It took courage to make a picure of this heroic romance. It is a most faithful transcription—one approached with reverance, feeling and imagination. No attempt has been made to improve on the play. Nothing movieish has been written into it. A great deal of the dialogue has been transferred to the screen—and these sub titles, expressing a fine romantic mood and seasoned with wit and sentiment, add much in capturing the charm and appeal of the play.

The picture has been produced on a lavish scale. It carries rich colors and is animated with vivid scenes—glorfying the Paris of 1640. The strutting, pompous Cyrano is a play-fellow. Way down in his heart he is humble, but he strikes a pose to counteract the impression given by his gross features. He is a master hand at love-making, but he keeps the secret of his romance in his heart. He loves by proxy for he feels himself too much a monstrosity to imagine himself an object of romance. Such sacrifice always strikes deep.

The story is woven around this figure. And how magnificently it is played by Pierre Magnier of the Comedie Francaise. He captures all the pathos—all the humanity and humility of the sorrowful lover who smiles and struts to hide his real emotions. It is a scene charged with real feeling when Cyrano manages to keep his engagement with his beloved though he has suffered a mortal injury. He dies on his feet—a glorious death. The intimate episodes carry tremendous appeal, yet there are moments which are pictorially fine too. Take notice of the Parisian atmosphere—and the scene before the battle of Arras.

Evidently dicing or "craps" as some people call it is a much older game than we had suspected for here are members of the cast of "The Wanderer" (Paramount) hard at it. Reading from the left the law violators are Ernest Torrence, William Collier, Jr., Director Raoul Walsh and Geta Nissen.

The newest United Artists Producer, John W. Considine, and his star, Peter the Great, pose in one of the beautiful spots of the United Studios in Hollywood.

And this entrancing vision is Lina Basquette, Follies Dancer, who became the bride of Sam Warner, of Warner Bros., on Independence Day. Gosh, some fellows have all the luck.

Blanche Sweet visits her girl friend, Colleen Moore, on "The Desert Flower" (First National) set. We guess Blanche was as curious as we are as to what a desert flower looked like.

In all a great picture. You don't think in terms of "costume" drama here. The drama is too moving and the characters too vivid for such a thought.

TAKING THE MEDAL

ALL Hollywood turned out the other night at a reception in the Ambassador Hotel when the Valentino medal for the best screen performance of 1924 was given to John Barrymore for his work in "Beau Brummel." Rupert Hughes was master of ceremonies and the social, art and picture circles of Los Angeles attended. Mr. Barrymore in replying to Mr. Hughes' speech of presentation paid a neat tribute to Hollywood and the picture industry. There were informal remarks by others in attendance—and the entire affair was broadcasted over KFWB, the Warner's studio station.

Among those who sat in on the ceremonies were Marion Davies, Louise Fazenda, Robert Z. Leonard, Lew Cody, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Irene Rich, Richard Dix, Alice Joyce, Lois Wilson, Jack Warner, Bennie Ziedman, Ernst Lubitsch, Millard Webb and a host of others.

ENTERTAINING THE COPS

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, the big mogul of First National, and Earl Hudson, the big chief of F. N's productions, did some entertaining last week. Having a police picture in their possession, "The Making of O'Malley," they invited forty police officials from New York and surrounding towns—all members of the Metropolitan Police Association to have dinner in the studios and look over the film. As Messrs. Rowland and Hudson always entertain on a lavish scale they entrusted the preparation of the dinner to the chefs from Sherry's. Following the repast the picture was run off with a musical accompaniment by the studio orchestra. Then came the speeches. Milton Sills joined the sponsors with an oration.

Lee A. Ochs, Director of the Piccadilly theatre, New York, and Sam E. Morris, head of distribution for Warner Bros., signing the contracts which give to the Piccadilly the entire output of the Warner Studios.

YOUTH AND SINCERITY

ONE of the greatest expressions of heart-felt emotion that we've read in a long, long time is quoted by Ray Long, the vice-president and editor of Hearst's International and Cosmopolitan Magazine, in the August issue of the magazine. He elaborates as follows: "We reproduce here a letter which is one of the finest expressions of sympathy I have ever read. It was written as you will have guessed by a youngster; by a boy of nine (the title of the article is—A Lesson I've Learned from a Boy of Nine) Billie Hays, son of Will Hays, head of the motion picture industry. It was to Billie's chum, Jimmie Collins, whose father had been killed in a mine disaster in their home town of Sullivan, Indiana.

You will have guessed it came from the pen of a youngster, because you know as I know, that no grown-up expresses sympathy with such direct, spontaneous, heart-felt sympathy.

As I read Billie Hays' letter I contrasted it with the wire I sent recently to a friend who had lost one dear to him. I felt sympathy, but instead of taking the time to think out and write a letter, I called

Samuel Goldwyn, producer, and George Sidney, actor, greet Montague Glass, the creator of the "Potash and Perlmutter" characters upon his arrival in Hollywood after a trip to Europe. Number three of the series, about to be produced by Goldwyn, will be adapted from the stage play "Partners Again."

my stenographer and dictated a telegram. And the result was a stilted, conventional expression which read like a form letter. And that, I'll venture to say, is just what Billie's father and every other busy man does under similar circumstances.

'Busy men.' That's the trouble. We're busy, we're hurried, we're worried. But a boy of nine has inspired me to a decision never again to be so busy that I can't take the time and the thought to write a real letter to a friend in distress. I shan't be able to write wit hthe feeling that Billie showed (nor will Billie when he's as old as I am); but at least my friend shall know that I have written from the heart."

Here's the letter written in a childish scrawl.

Dear James:

It's too bad old man but you can't help it. You have to take life as it comes. God knows what's good for us you know that. He gives and he takes. Right now is the sadest time you'll have in your life. To have your old dad pardner die. Good-by, your best friend and pardner, Bill.

CAMPUS SELECTIONS

ANOTHER college has been heard from in handing out votes for the best actor and actress of the screen. The senior class of Emory University, Atlanta, Ga., cast its ballots in favor of John Barrymore and Norma Talmadge. The motion was accepted and carried unanimously after a few dissenting votes.

A "shot" "Shot" during the filming of "Lady Robinhood" (F. B. O.). Reading from left to right, excluding the men with the dark shirts, we have Pandro Berman, assistant director, Silvano Balboni, photographer, Evelyn Brent, the star, and Ralph Ince, the director.

Though a director in his own right Frank Borzage still takes direction from his original director as evidenced by the scene above. Borzage, Sr., instructs wife and son while taking screen tests of Mrs. Borzage on one of the sets for "Lazybones" (Fox) which Frank has just finished.

A CHAMP SHEIK

THEY may talk of modern sheiks, but back in the matinee idol days our mothers and aunts saw some love-making that would make the present crop of screen lovers look like amateurs. There was Henry Dixey and Kryle Bellew, E. H. Sothern and William Faversham, James K. Hackett and Robert Edeson.

The last-mentioned is appearing in the movies now—playing character roles. But he might have been the original matinee idol when you consider the large group of leading ladies he made love to in such romantic fashion.

As a stage sheik he wooed Virginia Harned, Cora Tanner, Ellen Burg, Flora Juliette Bowley, Amelia Bingham, Edna Wallace Hopper, Annie Russell, Elsie DeWolfe, Rose Coghlan, Isabelle Irving, Effie Shannon, Olive Wyndham, Ann Murdock, Clara Bloodgood, Mme. Kalich, Adrienne Morrison, Katherine Grey, Henrietta Crosman, Viola Allen, Ida Conquest, Agnes Miller, Effie Ellsler, Bijou Fernandez, Lolita Robertson, Alice Brady, Mary Boland, Violet Kemble Cooper and Maude Adams. Added to this list are a score of picture stars. Just at present Edeson is now wooing Leatrice Joy in Cecil DeMille's newest picture.

A BY ORDER OF THE COURT

PORTLAND, Oregon judge ordered a motion picture in his court not long ago for the first time in the history of the State. The room was full of couples seeking divorces and the picture shown was "Are Parents People?" from the story by Alice Duer Miller. The jurist had a notion the film might cause some of the couples to become reconciled instead of seeking different paths. Maybe it did. The notice doesn't say.

However, it may be that the judge decided these couples were determined to cut their marital knots. If so it is quite likely that he ordered the other Paramount picture to be shown. Perhaps he showed them "Grounds for Divorce."

This isn't the way it will appear on the screen, but it's the way it looked in the taking. The players are Pauline Starke and Conrad Nagel and the picture is "Sun-Up" (Metro-Goldwyn). The two musicians were not listed in the cast.

BUILDING A HOTEL

BEFORE beginning activities in the new Christie feature, Julian Eltinge is combining business with pleasure by starting preliminary work on the hotel which he is building at Alpine in Southern California—where he has a ranch and considerable property. It is the actor's plan to develop this property extensively and make his permanent home here after retiring from the footlights and the kliegs. Meanwhile he is dividing his time between the ranch and his Los Angeles home. Eltinge has had so much experience with hotels during the years of stage career that he should know how to double as "Mine Host." In his tourist hotel there will be many features which the weary traveler has longed for and never found.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

THE above title will adorn the special reel which Short Films Syndicate will present for the Greater Movie Season. If for no other reason than it shows how the screen has advanced it is worth anyone's time to look it over. Besides it will bring up memories of the early days when the movies were trying so hard to interest the public.

It is a one-reel subject and offers snatches of film history that were recorded between 1895 and 1903. You will glimpse the erstwhile stage comedienne, May Irwin, registering emotion as it concerns the kiss. There is a shot of a storm at sea which was the first attempt to capture the action of the waves. After several other antique sketches are shown the reel concludes with (can you guess it?—You're right) "The Great Train Robbery." This was the first effort at recording a narrative. It paved the way for all our screen stories—for it showed that a complete picture could be made from a plot and characterization. The narrative was only twelve minutes long—but it certainly made an impression. The New York Times gave it a two-column review back in 1903. Hark to the excerpts from the review.

"It is a source of unending wonder. . . . There is an immense amount of shooting. . . . The smoke of the pistols is plainly seen. . . . While witnessing the exhibition, women put their fingers in their ears to shut out the noise of the firing! That is pure realism. . . . More than 5,000,000 persons, it is estimated, have looked at these pictures. . . . During the hold-up of the passengers of the robbed train it looks as though more than a hundred persons leave the several cars and form in line to be Men drop dead too suddenly when shot. . . . All this is the result of poor acting, but the results are certainly astounding."

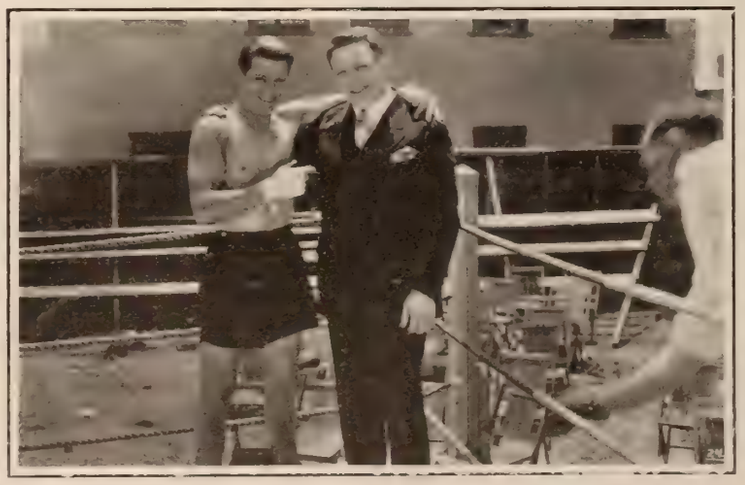
LUNCHEON FOR GRIFFITH

IN honor of his starting work on "That Royle Girl," his first picture under his new contract with Famous Players, a luncheon was given to D. W. Griffith at the Long Island studio Wednesday noon which was attended by the motion picture scribes of the New York dailies, fan magazines and trade papers. In addition to Mr. Griffith and the leading players of the cast, Carol Dempster, James Kirkwood, Harrison Ford and George Rigas, those present from the dailies included Rose Pelswick, C. B. Davis, Harriet Underhill, Richard Watts, Jr., John Cohen, W. L. Waldorf, George Gerhard, Quinn Martin, Mildred Spain, Irene Thirer, Dorothy Herzog, Regina Cannon, Martin Dickstein, Eugene Kelcey Allen, Tom Kennedy, Motion Picture News; John Spargo, Exhibitors' Herald; Robert E. Welsh, Moving Picture World; Abe Bernstein, Ex. Trade Review; Joe Dannenberg, Film Daily—and several others.

Representatives from Famous Players included Edwin C. King, Charles E. McCarthy, E. W. Wingart, Erville Alderson, Harry Fishbeck, Mrs. John Harriman, Lloyd Sheldon, William Le Baron, J. J. Gain and Forrest Halsey.



"That Royle Girl" will be a picturization of the Cosmopolitan magazine story written by Edwin Balmer. It is a drama of today in the Chicago jazz-zone.

MOVIES FROM THE ZOO

THE Bronx Zoo is going in for movies. The authorities up there will present a series of exhibitions and daylight motion picture shows portraying animal life for the benefit of children who remain in the city during the summer. The entertainments will be held in a tent to be erected in the southern part of the Zoo grounds. The series will be held under the supervision of Dr. W. Reid Blair, acting director of the Zoo. Animals that are docile enough to be handled will appear in person before the children, and there will be moving pictures of the others. The exhibitions will continue throughout the vacation season.

GATHERING THE TRIBES

NOT since the Indian tribes swooped down on the Little Big Horn and massacred General Custer's soldiers have there been so many Indians in one place as those gathered together by William K. Howard for the Paramount production, "The Vanishing American." The location is Kayenta, the Indian trading post on the Navajo reservation in Arizona. Ten thousand members of the Apache, Navajo, Hopi, Supuais, Havasupais and Wallapais tribes are facing the setting sun—rarin' to go. It's a certainty that Howard isn't overlooking a single bet to record the life of the red man as Zane Grey wrote it.

First National Gets Control of West Coast Theatres

Buys 70% Interest from Lesser and Gore Bros.

FIRST NATIONAL has acquired the controlling interest in West Coast Theatres, Inc., according to information obtained by MOTION PICTURE NEWS on Wednesday. The deal was finally settled at a meeting of First National officials with officials of West Coast in New York Tuesday night, July 7.

This means that First National, as a corporation, definitely enters the exhibition field, and foreshadows one of the most important developments in the history of the industry. Control of West Coast was obtained by the acquisition of the stock of Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers, which amounts to about seventy per cent.

It was reported that Adolph Ramish, the other principal partner, had sold his interest, approximately 30 per cent., to William Fox, but in some quarters it was said that this deal had not been consummated and might not be.

Purchase of the controlling interest in West Coast by First National was made, according to authority which MOTION PICTURE NEWS considers in every way reliable, by the levying of an assessment on the franchise holders, in the same manner in which pictures used to be purchased by the organization.

One of the developments, as a result of the West Coast deal, will be, it appears, the formation of a subsidiary corporation by First National for the acquisition of theatres.

While this has not been definitely determined upon, it would seem to be a logical outcome.

Some years ago, it will be recalled, Associated First National Theatres, Inc., was chartered for the same purpose, but this corporation, it is understood, was never actively employed in theatre acquisition.

In last week's issue MOTION PICTURE NEWS exclusively forecast the fact that First National was bidding for West Coast chain in competition with Fox. It was apparent then that strong pressure was being brought to bear on Sol Lesser by First National officials. The First National viewpoint, it is understood, is this: in order to assure outlet for its product in the important West Coast territory it was considered vitally necessary not to permit the West Coast chain control to go outside the First National ranks.

In other words, the competition among producer-distributors for strategic chains has now reached the point where First National considers it must enter directly, as a corporation, into the battle for theatre circuits.

Much the same situation was presented, it will be recalled, in the instance of the Gordon circuit in New England which was sold to Famous Players-Lasky. Nathan H. Gordon was an original First National franchise holder. The theatres went to Famous, although the New England franchise did not, but was absorbed by First National.

The entry of First National into theatre acquisition will obviously have a far-reaching effect on the exhibition situation. The producer-distributors now engaged in the theatre war are Famous Players-Lasky, First National, Metro-Goldwyn through Loew, Inc., Universal, Fox, and Warner Brothers.

The West Coast chain is dominant in Southern California. There are now 110 houses in the circuit and others are being added. This week, for example, MOTION PICTURE NEWS received the announcement of two real estate deals, consummated by West Coast and involving over $750,000, and the letting of contracts for two theatres in important suburban communities of Los Angeles.

One of these structures will rise at Mesa and Slauson, representing an investment of $550,000, divided as follows: $300,000 representing the cost of the building; ground value at $150,000, and building equipment representing $100,000. There will be large stores on the street level of this building, with commodious offices, apartments, and halls on the second floor. The theatre itself will be one of the most elaborate suburban show palaces in Southern California, with a 2,000 seating capacity, and the decorative motif, as well as the fixtures and other appointments, will be of the most modern design and construction. A stage capable of housing the largest variety and road attractions will be a feature of the playhouse. A huge orchestral organ will also be installed. Luxurious log seats is but another item of the costly equipment to be provided.

The contract for this building was let to Bartley and Gould.

At the intersection of Vermont and 87th Streets, a building with many splendid stores, as well as a large theatre, will be erected. This will be of semi-Spanish design, representing a total cost of approximately $250,000, and the contract for this structure was let to the Wesco Construction Company. The theatre portion of the building calls for a 1,500 seating capacity, with luxurious loges, a modern orchestral pipe-organ of tremendous volume, and a decorative scheme as elaborate as any house of its size on the Pacific Coast. This theatre will also have an enormous stage with capacity for presenting large road and vaudeville attractions, and the balance of the equipment will be of the most modern and latest improved type.

The negotiations call for the erection, equipment and operation of this edifice jointly by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and the Southside Theatres, Inc., and the completed theatre will be under the personal local management of Ralph B. Grunauer, general manager of the latter organization, which also is now erecting a beautiful theatre at the intersection of Moneta and Manchester.

According to M. Gore, construction on both edifices will begin immediately.

In connection with Sol Lesser's decision to retire from the theatre field on the West Coast, film circles read with interest the announcement that he would produce "The Winning of Barbara Worth" for United Artists. As is well known, Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists, was formerly a heavy stockholder in West Coast Theatres, Inc., but sold his interest some time ago.

Four Believed Dead in Kansas City Explosion

With the recovery of only three bodies from the ruins of the Gillis theatre, Kansas City, which was wrecked by an explosion last week, it is believed now that the total loss of life will be four, including a fireman who was killed in attempting to rescue others. Had the explosion occurred an hour later, when the midnight show would have been started, the loss of life would have run into the hundreds.

Various theories are being investigated as to the cause of the explosion, one being that recent blasting on "Hobo" Hill near the theatre might have weakened the gas mains which entered the house. It has been rumored that gas was smelled in an adjoining restaurant basement on the afternoon of the explosion that night. Labor trouble also was advanced as a possible cause, but nothing logical has yet been run to earth,.

In the meantime lawvers have flocked to court with suits, representing the victims of the disaster, the suits being filed against the city.

Rebuilding Berlin Theatre Destroyed by Fire

Work has been started on the construction of the Stern theatre in Berlin, a Ufa house destroyed by fire some time ago. The new building is to have a seating capacity of 1,600, almost double the size of the original theatre. It is planned to open the house in September.

Legal Battle Starts in Connecticut

Constitutionality of Tax Law Attacked at Hearing Being Held Before Three Federal Judges in New Haven

THE battle against the Connecticut ten-dollar-a-reel tax law starts this week. Complaints have been filed in the United States District Court in New Haven seeking to restrain officials of that State from enforcing the law on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

The hearing is set for Friday, July 10, at New Haven before Judge Henry Wade Rogers, of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, presiding; and Judges Henry Goddard and Thomas Thacher, of New York, constituting the other members of the tribunal.

The case is being argued on behalf of the Hays organization, by George W. Wickersham, former Attorney-General of the United States, assisted by Benedict M. Holden, of Hartford. The State of Connecticut is represented by its Attorney-General.

The defendants in the case, which is brought by the Fox Film Corporation, and the American Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, as illustrative of typical situations, are Governor John H. Trumbull, of Connecticut and other State officials as follows: William H Blodgett, Tax Commissioner; John J. Splain, Deputy Tax Commissioner; Robbins B. Stoeckel, Fred M. Salmon, and Ernest L. Isbell, Commissioners of Police; and Robert T. Hurley, Superintendent of Police.

In addition to the Fox and American Feature cases, others were to be filed, it was stated at the Hays office in New York. All the actions are designed to bring forward different conditions under which film is distributed in Connecticut, as a basis for the industry's contention that the law is unconstitutional.

The broad grounds on which the argument of unconstitutionality is based are:

(1) That shipment of film is interstate and therefore not subject to taxation by a State.

It is argued that the law is therefore a burden on interstate commerce.

(2) The statute, it is contended, deprives a citizen of property without due process of law. It is also set forth in the complaints that certain powers given the Tax Commissioner do not constitute censorship enforceable by the state police power. The United States Supreme Court ruled some years ago that film censorship was a legitimate exercise of state police power. In the Connecticut case, however, the industry contends that the law does not provide censorship in conformity with the Supreme Court decision, but is wholly arbitrary. No censorship standards are provided.

The Tax Commissioner, under the law, has the right to revoke the license of any film which he deems improper for showing in the State, but he does not review the film when it enters the State. Instead it is registered, then licensed and the fee paid and the film can then be shown. Later, the license may be revoked and the fee retained by the State.

(3) It is further set forth in the complaint that that the tax charged bears no reasonable relation to the value of the property taxed, which therefore constitutes undue discrimination. Regardless of the cost of the picture, a tax of $10 a reel on every reel of 1,000 feet or less and an additional tax of 50 cents on each hundred feet in excess of 1,000, are charged.

Editorial opinion in Connecticut newspapers is opposed to the law, according to officials of the Hays organization, who told trade press representatives this week that editorials in twenty different newspapers had already been received, and not one was favorable to the law.

Thought is being given by the Hays organization to withdrawing from film distribution in Connecticut in case the law is sustained in the courts. In this connection, it was pointed out that Connecticut represents less than two per cent of the gross intake of the industry.

The industry's contentions in the Connecticut case were outlined to the trade paper men at the Monday conference in the Hays offices by Gabriel L. Hess and Charles C. Pettijohn, of the M. P. P. D. A. legal staff.

Independent Testimonial for Woodhull

PRESIDENT R. F. WOODHULL of the M. P. T. O. A. was tendered a testimonial in the form of a resolution at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey last week that was highly pleasing to him. It was presented by Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America in behalf of that organization.

The resolution beautifully engrossed on parchment and bound in a gold-embossed leather portfolio was a pledge of loyalty and cooperation to Woodhull and his organization by the independent producers, distributors and exchangemen. The document carried the seals of the Independent Association and the M. P. T. O. A. artistically done in water colors and was signed by the officers of the association. It also bore a list of the entire membership of the organization.

June Charters Establish Record

Amount of Capital Invested is Believed to Exceed That of Any Other Month

WHAT is believed to be the largest amount of capital ever listed in a single month of new charters granted, is revealed in the regular monthly survey of The Film Daily for the month of June. Though there was a falling off of 97 charters granted over the previous month, the June corporations listed $103,640,900. During the month 135 charters were granted in the industry.

The largest amount of capital ever listed in the industry was that of North American Theatres, Inc., in Delaware, organized with a capital of $55,000,000. The Atascadera M. P. Co., another Delaware corporation, listed $11,000,000. The American Amusement Corp. and Consolidated Theatres Corp., both formed in Delaware, each listed $10,000,000. Belasco Prod., Delaware, listed $5,000,000; Greater San Francisco Theaters, Delaware, $2,000,000; the American Composers and Cino Theater Co., each $1,000,000, and also having Delaware charters.

As usual theatre companies were the most represented, with new production units second and distribution third. There were 66 theater companies chartered, 30 to produce, 11 distributing organizations and 28 miscellaneous. The latter group includes a cameraman's club, music companies, realty corporations, holding companies, supply dealers, exporters, camera brokers, publicity agents, program dealers, booking agents, financing organizations and other lines. The following table shows how the three largest branches of the industry were represented in the June incorporation list:

State	Exhib.	Prod.	Dist.	Misc.
California	8	7	....	1
Delaware	11	5	6	1

New York State again leads in the number of companies chartered, and, as usual, Delaware heads the list with regard to the amount of capital. The New York charters numbered 57, a decrease of 40 over May. The Delaware charters, totaling 23, listed $98,553,000. Quotes Exhibitors In Praise Of Arbitration

Files Open To Justice Dept., Says Pettijohn

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel of the Film Boards of Trade, this week virtually threw down the gauntlet to the critics of the Arbitration System. In a conference with trade paper representatives, held on Monday at the Hays offices in New York, Mr. Pettijohn announced that the files of the Hays offices, as well as those of six Film Boards had been thrown open to the Department of Justice in the investigation which the latter is conducting into the operation of the Boards.

It was also made known to the trade paper men that Mr. Pettijohn recently sent a letter to the Film Boards instructing them to get the unbiased opinions of three or four representative exhibitors in each of the 32 zones on what they thought of Arbitration and the workings of the Film Boards.

Responses had already been received from 75 or 80 of these exhibitors, and only a small minority were unfavorable to Arbitration as it now exists. The letter was sent out, Mr. Pettijohn stated, with the full knowledge and approval of the Department of Justice.

The originals of the exhibitor letters were shown to the trade paper reporters, and they were permitted to make excerpts from them. The names of the exhibitors are withheld because officials of the Hays organization thought it would not be fair to publish them, as the exhibitors had not been informed that the letters were for publication.

The reporters examined the letters in detail however, and were invited to ask any questions they pleased. The excerpts printed below were copied from the originals shown to the reporters.

Present at the Monday conference, which is being held weekly by the Hays organization for the convenience of the trade press in obtaining authentic news of the M. P. P. D. A's activities, were Courtland Smith, secretary of the organization; Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney for the Film Boards; Burt New, of the Exhibitor Statistical Bureau, recently formed by the Hays organization; Joseph J. O'Neill, of the Hays staff; Mr. Pettijohn, and the trade paper men.

Discussing the matter generally, and in reply to questions, Mr. Pettijohn declared that 95% of the exhibitors think the arbitration system is "a great institution." He produced the letters from theatre owners to substantiate his remarks.

He also said that while 50 vacancies had occurred in the distributor membership of the Arbitration Boards for various causes, not one exhibitor in the United States had ever resigned from an Arbitration Board. He cited this in proof of his assertion that exhibitors, by an overwhelming majority, are for the present arbitration system.

It was also announced that an Arbitration Board had been set up in Charleston, W. Va., for the convenience of exhibitors, despite the fact that Charleston is not an exchange center. This was done at the request of theatre owners, it was stated.

Arbitration hearings are also being alternated between Memphis and Little Rock in that territory, for convenience of exhibitors.

Further expansion of the Film Boards is being planned in Canada, Mexico and Cuba. In the Dominion, there are now two Boards in operation, one at Montreal and the other at Toronto. Four more will be established, so that the six Canadian film zones will be completely covered.

Excerpts from the exhibitor letters on Arbitration and the Film Boards, copies of which have been sent to the Department of Justice by Mr. Pettijohn, follow:

"Oral testimony shou'd be permitted before the Board, even if it is only the word of the exhibitor against that of the salesman. It would be up to the Board of Trade to determine the truth and act accordingly.

"However, with all of its disadvantages toward the exhibitor, I feel that the Board of Arbitration has proved a good thing for the industry as a whole, for in the rigid enforcement of contracts, exhibitors have been taught that they can't go out and tie up most of the pictures in the market, to the disadvantage of his competitor, never intending to play them at all."

"I have on'y had one experience with the Board, but the treatment I received from them was certainly all that anyone could ask, and I am sure that I should like to see it continue as at present."

"Having been a member, as an exhibitor, of the arbitration board, I feel that I am qualified and able to say that I consider the Arbitration Plan, adopted by the Exhibitors and Distributors, as the only fair way to settle disputes and protect both the distributors and exhibitors.

"In all the cases that were taken up before the Board while I was a member, while 95 per cent of the cases were decided in favor of the distributor, I feel that the exhibitors were also very fair in deciding these cases impartially. There are so many angles to our business and so many controversies that come up from time to time between exhibitor and distributor that this is the only known method that I know of, where these matters can be taken care of."

"I will say that I don't think a hell of a lot of it. It seems to me, from my personal observation, that it is becoming an enforcement, as well as a collective agency.

"Where a man is oversold on price or quantity, the Arbitration Board should have the privilege of adjusting prices and scaling the number of pictures down to what is reasonable and fair."

"1. How has it affected the exchanges? It has put their work upon a definite basis which enables them to count upon the playing of all pictures for which they have the proper contracts with the exhibitors. It has led to the prompt playing of pictures bought for the reason that exhibitors have felt that they must live up to their agreements. It has given the exchanges a force which can be applied to the unfair exhibitors in that a great many exhibitors do not desire the publicity of being brought before their brother exhibitors for unfair methods and breaches of contract. It has also called to the attention of exchange managers, the unethical and sometimes dishonest method used by salesmen with the result that there is a better class of salesmen in this territory than before the coming of the Board.

"2. How has it affected the exhibitors? The greatest benefit I have noted is that it has ended the practice of so many exhibitors of over-buying either through ignorance or the desire to sew up the product in a particular town. It has also led to more business-like methods upon the part of exhibitors in keeping their contracts and important papers and in keeping some idea as to their obligations and responsibilities. It has enabled the small exhibitor, who formerly had little redress against a large producer or distributor, to have his complaints heard and adjusted as the equities and justice of the case required. In the past this would have meant expensive and long-delayed legal action for him.

"3. How has it affected the industry as a whole in this territory? I believe that it has been of great good in smoothing out all sorts of difficulties and in the promotion of better feeling between exhibitors and exchanges. As I see it, it has been a good thing from many angles and I favor its continuance."

"I do not hestitate to give my unqualified approval to the work that has been and is being done by our efficient organization. I am sure that this medium of solving the exhibitors and distributors problems is the only feasible and fair method of arbitration."

"It is my opinion that the Arbitration Board of Film Board is just this—Judge and jury—settling all cases to their own satisfaction. It is an illegal combine in restraint of trade and should be handled as any other violation of the law, both criminally and civilly."

"Personally I think it is a Godsend to the Film Industry and the light is gradually breaking in on those who yet have to realize that times have changed, and that fairness in the Film business is coming into its own through the medium of the Arbitration Boards."

"The members of the Joint Boards of Arbitration have been very fair-minded and have been a real help in adjusting what otherwise might have proved to be a serious situation."

"It is a real pleasure for me to reply to your letter and assure you that my experience with the above mentioned Board has absolutely convinced me that they are acting without any partiality between exhibitor and film Exchanges, and with an absence of any political influence to govern their service in any way."

"On Arbitration in this zone, will say that I believe that it has been for some time past, and is now being carried out fairly, impartially and successfully and functioning to the best interest of the majority."

"It has been the opinion of the organization every since these Boards were established that they had filled a long felt want, and had brought about a feeling of friendliness and good will between the exhibitor and the distributor, which was sadly lacking for many years."

"From what I hear from the other exhibitors who have attended the board meetings it is my impression that the board functions with great success locally at least."

"I believe that the Arbitration Board in this district has been working for the good of both the exhibitors and exchanges, and that the work of this board has saved money for both interests. This idea is based on my knowledge that litigation in court is very expensive and very tedious, and practically all of the troubles in our trade have been and can be settled before the Board of Arbitration."

"Arbitration is in my opinion one of the great steps in the advancement of the moving picture industry."

"It is my opinion that the Joint Board of Arbitration is doing some real, constructive work in the industry in this State and from my experience and observation it is my opinion that all representatives on this Board have been conscientious and fair in their decisions on claims presented to them."

"As you know, I have been a member of the Arbitration Board since its birth, and I can truthfully say that every case has been handled in an honest and just manner by the arbitrators. This Board has its drawbacks, but with the cooperation of the Film Board of Trade I am sure that these difficulties can be ironed out to everyone's satisfaction."

"You will no doubt recall your requesting my opinion as to what I think of the functioning of the Film Board of Trade and the Joint Board of Arbitration.

"Both of these organizations have been a great help in alleviating some very trying situations which the writer had thought were due to remain with the film business forever, inasmuch as all previous attempts to put matters on a business-like basis had failed.

"The spirit of cooperation and a desire to do some real, constructive work for both the Exchanges and the theatre owners, I am happy to say, seems to be the controlling factor in both of the above organizations."

"The Joint Board of Arbitration has been functioning very effectively and satisfactorily and is doing a great work in adjusting the difficulties between distributors and exhibitors at a tremendous financial saving in avoiding the law courts as well as effecting more amicable settlements of disputes between the distributors and exhibitors."

"It has been my experience, and I have served on the Arbitration Board occasionally, that every facility is offered for fair adjustment of disputes between distributors and exhibitors, and that in cases in which exhibitors complained against appear in person the Board's value is incalculable in bettering the relationship between the contending parties."

"I believe that the Arbitration Board of the Film Board of Trade, from my personal experience and observation during the time it has been functioning in this territory, has done wonders in bringing the distributor and exhibitor closer together and settling many grievances without going to court and saving considerable expense to all parties concerned".

"The functioning of the Board of Arbitration in this territory is an absolute necessity. Conserving time, expense, good will, with its findings generally promptly accepted, and not to my knowledge has there been an appeal to a Court of Law in the past year.

"The Film Board of Arbitration is now in step with like practice in other big business".

"It has been a pleasure indeed to have sacrificed from business whatever time has been necessary at these joint meetings and it has been the source of considerable information as well. If there has been any adverse criticism of the actions or decisions of the local board, I feel quite safe in saying that it has been made by those who are misinformed".

"In reply to your request for my opinion of the Film Board of Arbitration, I wish to state that I believe it is fulfilling a good purpose. I believe that Exchangemen as well as exhibitors serving on this Board, have given fair and impartial decisions on all questions brought before them."

"Permit me to congratulate the Arbitration Board in the theatre work that they are doing by bringing together a more pleasant as well as a business like feeling between exhibitor and exchange man."

"Having served four years, I am pleased to say that my associates on the Arbitration Board were fair, capable and conscientious in the decisions rendered to both exhibitor and exchange."

"The exchangemen, in my opinion, have been more than fair in giving the exhibitors a square deal. As a whole, the Arbitration Board is constructive and an evolution and step for higher business ethics and better understanding and relationship between the exhibitors, producers and exchange men, independent or otherwise."

"The cost of the Board is paid by the exchanges voluntarily with none asked from the exhibitor. Exchanges push creations of these boards. Therefore they figure it will benefit them and be worth the cost. Few, very few, of the exhibitor complaints, many just and right, ever come before the boards, as the distance and trouble and the natural peaceable inclination prevent this. Exchanges do not use the Board as much as they do the bluff of getting an exhibitor on the carpet and it is an expense to have to go before them. Therefore the Exhibitor usually comes across in fine shape and the Board never hears of it.

"My candid judgment is that the whole matter is a farce, and ought to be abolished, letting each man fight his own battle. If we had a State organization it might be otherwise. I have never been up or threatened, and so my opinion is unbiased. I have every respect for you and your associates, but I cannot see the real need for your board."

"First, I believe that it is a poor man's court, an exhibitor's court, where justice is done between the parties in which each is equally represented.

"Second, It is the most inexpensive way of settling disputes of which I know and has saved the exhibitor many hundreds of dollars when considered from the standpoint of what it might have cost him to take these matters to court and to have them decided in any other manner.

"Third, It has never been necessary to call in a seventh arbitrator although both sides are equally represented.

"Fourth, at no time has an unfair advantage been taken of either party with reference to the matter in dispute they having submitted their sides in a manner at which they can set forth all of the facts without employing outside assistance such as attorneys or other."

"I have been in the exhibiting end of the moving picture business for a period covering over nine years and have seen it in all of its stages, and I can truthfully state, from a private capacity, and also as exhibitor member of the Board of Arbitration that it has been a means of salvation for both."

Greater Movie Season Spirit Spreads Over Country

$50,000 Is Assured for New York Campaign

FIFTY thousand dollars for the New York Greater Movie Season campaign.

Marcus Loew elected chairman of the executive committee with Joseph Plunkett, managing-director of the Mark Strand Theatre, and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, as his principal aides.

Wells Hawks appointed general manager in charge of local activities.

These were the salient results of the final meeting between nationally important figures in the exhibiting field and Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., who inaugurated the August drive. Greater Movie Season will be celebrated enthusiastically throughout Greater New York beginning August 2nd.

By the middle of July the New York campaign will be in full swing, building by billboards, newspapers and commercial cooperation into August when the largest parade the motion picture industry has yet staged is planned as a monster demonstration of film activities not only as applied to general amusement but also in their relation to civic and industrial welfare. As a first step Mr. Hawks has summoned a meeting of publicity men and theatre executives to departmentalize his campaign, while Messrs. Loew, Plunkett and O'Reilly of the executive committee attend to the necessary budgetting and financing, which will be on a pro rata basis in accordance with theatre capacity and admission charges.

Working on the foundation that the Hays office has established during the past three months, and with most of the civic, industrial and social organizations that have endorsed the movement centrally located in New York, the Greater New York campaign is looked to as an outstanding feature of the national season.

Four hundred theatres throughout Michigan are embraced in the drive that H. M. Richey, general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., is conducting. When the national movement was considered originally, Mr. Richey pledged Mr. Hays his complete support and a campaign in which his organization would have 100% active participation. That Mr. Richey has more than fulfilled his promise is evidenced by the proportions the Michigan drive has reached, through the efforts he has put behind it.

The Greater Movie Season contest is being made a statewide affair; full newspaper cooperation has been secured; while general business concerns, joining in, have given Greater Movie Season the significance of a Michigan trade exposition. Proclamations from the Mayor of Detroit and mayors of other important cities will commend the season to the public.

The Fabian circuit in New Jersey stands aligned with the national plan, A. M. Fabian has informed Mr. Hays.

The Fabian circuit consists of fifteen important houses, including the Branford Theatre, Newark and the Regent Theatre, Patterson. The campaign will cover Newark, Patterson, Passaic, Elizabeth, Ridgwood, Popton Lakes and Butler.

An active campaign is progressing in Atlantic City under the general-managership of Edward J. O'Keefe; while Camden and Trenton, with their zones, are embraced in the Philadelphia operations.

Meanwhile reports from many centers show the widening scope of the national drive.

Syracuse exhibitors unanimously endorsed and accepted the plan at a meeting that appointed the following officials:

Walter McDowell, Strand Theatre, general manager; Dave Harrison, Empire Theatre. treasurer, to work in conjunction with Mr. McDowell in collecting the assessments levied on the many theatres; Cliff Lewis, Strand interests, and Mitchel Fitzer, Rivoli, to handle publicity and advertising.

The city will be divided into zones, each in charge of a captain to collect the allotments in his respective territory. A budget of $2,000 was passed at the first meeting and $1,200 was immediately raised among those present. This money to be spent in billboards, newspaper advertising and novelties, will allow local exhibitors a campaign of far reaching possibilities.

The Orpheum Theatre, Scottsbluff, Nebraska, and its five allied theatres will pool resources for the drive, according to a communication from John C. Ingram of the Orpheum; while Jake Wells and Harry Bernstein of Richmond, Va. are enlisting newspapers and the various civic community clubs to carry the movement successfully through the state of Virginia.

C. S. Jensen, who has been elected general manager of the Portland, Oregon, season is working in cooperation with J. Von Herberg, conducting the Seattle drive, to link both cities and share costs of the major features that include the attendance of screen stars at movie balls to be held in Portland and Seattle.

With Boston to set the pace, a dozen other New England centers have inaugurated local drives. Fall River, Mass., has Nate Yamins of the Rialto Theatre, as general manager; Lawrence J. Dineen of the Modern Theatre, Haverhill; A. C. Bouge of the Strand Theatre, Lowell; San Torgan, Strand Theatre, New Bedford; Theodore B. Baylies, Worcester; Elmer Daniels, Olympia Theatre. In Rhode Island A. C. Emery of the Majestic Theatre, will conduct the Providence campaign, with Harry Horgan of the Opera House, Newport, and Jos. Donahue of the Park Theatre, Woonsocket, as general managers in their respective zones.

A complete survey of the field shows that 73 cooperative campaigns are in active operation with 2,745 theatres cooperating.

A budget of $5,000 for preliminary expenses in the Greater Movie Season campaign in Kansas and Missouri has been arranged by R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas-Missouri; Bruce Fowler, manager of the Newman theatre; Jack Roth, manager of the Isis theatre, and Dave Harding of Capitol enterprise.

An extensive poster display, which will be followed by newspaper advertising, has been planned. A merchant cooperative campaign is planned for Kansas City, under the direction of Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas-Missouri.

Members of the Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of New York, following the refusal of local exchanges to defray one third of the cost of putting over the Greater Movie Season project, have turned down the plan, so that the organization will not be behind the Movie Season. At the recent meeting of the Zone it was decided to get behind the plan if the distributors will come through with a third of the costs and a communication was sent to the exchanges asking if they would be willing to do this. The exchanges refused.

However most of the leading downtown exhibitors held a meeting and decided to go ahead with the campaign themselves. Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State, was named chairman. The following are among the exhibitors and houses which signed up at the meeting: Walter Hays, Victoria; Vincent R. McFaul, Shea's Hippodrome; M. Slotkin and Fred M. Shafer, Lafayette Square; William Dillemuth, Broadway Lyceum; J. H. Michael, Regent; F. Nowak, Lincoln; Barney Vohwinkle, Oriole; Jake Rappaport, Lovejoy, and N. Vassiliadis, Clinton-Strand. These exhibitors subscribed liberally to the fund.

Mayor William E. Dever and Governor Len Small will be asked by a committee of Chicago motion picture exhibitors, business men, ministers, civic and welfare leaders, to proclaim the month of August, "Greater Movie Season Month," to help bring before the public the value of the screen as an instrument of uplift and education, as well as its worth as an agency of building business in general.

This was decided upon at a mass meeting

Greater Movie Season Spirit Spreads

of Chicago exhibitors, called by Ralph T. Kettering, general manager of the Chicago campaign, at Ridge Hall, 7th street and Wabash avenue, where plans to celebrate the twenty-ninth anniversary of motion pictures were outlined.

Under present plans, an industrial parade showing the various commodities manufactured and distributed in Chicago, will be held on Aug. 1. To delight the hearts of the children, there will be clowns, patriotic music, animated advertisements and floats. The parade will be headed by the "King and Queen" of the movies, who will be chosen by a popular contest from men and women living in Chicago.

That Seattle motion picture patrons will be offered the finest entertainment in the history of the city during the Greater Movie Season, beginning on August 1, was indicated last week following the first meeting of the exhibitors of that territory to make plans for the observance of this national occasion. In addition to the finest films, motion picture houses both downtown in the city and in the outlying districts will offer elaborate prologues, presentations and musical specialties. Publicity for the Season has already begun in Seattle newspapers.

Under the direction of Mr. John G. VonHerberg of the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit, a number of committees have already begun work on plans for the celebration of the event. These committees include the following: Finance, Frank Edwards, Winter Garden Theatre, chairman; Publicity and advertising, H. C. Raleigh, First National Pictures Corporation, chairman; Outdoor committee: E. C. Bostick, Pantages Theatre, chairman; Decorations, Charles W. McKee, Heilig Theatre, chairman; General committee: John Hamrick, president of the M. P. T. O. W., Blue Mouse circuit of theatres, chairman.

Famous Players Has 358 Theatres in United States, 10 Abroad, Says Shauer

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY now owns or has a controlling interest in 358 theatres in the United States and ten abroad, according to E. E. Shauer, head of the Paramount foreign department, who recently sailed on the AQUITANIA. Mr. Shauer's statement was made to THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, which quoted him as follows:

"Famous Players is doing an excellent business. We now either own or have a controlling interest in 358 theatres scattered throughout the United States. This gives us an enormous distribution field. We have ten theatres abroad and are constantly adding to that number. We recently bought the Vaudeville Theatre in Paris, one of the most famous in the world. It is one block from the Opera and cost us about 25,000,000 francs. It will be changed so that it is very much like the best class of American movie theatres. We are building two theatres in London, one called the Paramount Theatre, which will be ready in the fall. That is near Piccadilly Circus, and is costing us about $250,000.

"There is a tremendous increase in film distribution throughout the world, and we are now supplying films in increasing volume to practically every country in the world."

Body of Missing Branch Manager Found in River

THE body of the late W. C. Pugh, former manager of Associated Exhibitors' office in Portland, Ore., who mysteriously disappeared on April 3rd, was found in the Williamette River at Portland on June 29th, according to a telegram received by John S. Woody, president of the organization.

The wire to Mr. Woody stated that identification is positive and complete and that circumstances under which the body was found indicated the deceased Exchange Manager had been the victim of foul play.

Mr. Pugh was last seen alive on Friday April 3 about 11:30 P. M. driving an Essex Coach with Oregon License plate 117-769 from Ninth and Davis Streets, toward Broadway Bridge in Portland. At the time of his reported disappearance neither his wife nor any of Pugh's friends could shed any light on the matter.

At the same time, 6,562 posters were condemned, so that well over 10 per cent of the submitted posters were rejected during the first six months that the poster censor bureau was in operation.

The report gives interesting statistics which show that the heaviest month was June when 12,777 posters were examined. Other months were as follows: January, 9,769; February, 9,001; March, 9,597; April, 9,630, and May, 10,253.

Samuel Goldwyn Joins United Artists

Fitzmaurice and King Productions Will Add $2,000,000 to Program for the Coming Season

WITH the return from the middle West this week of Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, comes the announcement that Samuel Goldwyn has joined that organization and will add $2,000,000 to its production program for the coming season. The announcement is also made that George Fitzmaurice and Henry King come with Goldwyn from First National as his directing staff, and that there will be no change in programs already arranged by these producing directors.

Players under contract to Goldwyn and the complete production personnel will remain unchanged. This brings to United Artists such featured players as Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Belle Bennett and Lois Moran.

According to the plans of the new affiliation King will complete "Stella Dallas," which is now under way, for United Artists Corporation release. He will follow this with an adaptation of the Robert Hichens' novel, "The Garden of Allah." Goldwyn will send King to the Far East to film scenes on the actual supposed site of the "Garden," near Biskra with the production unit.

In regard to the acquisition of Goldwyn and his staff, President Hiram Abrams said:

"The addition of Samuel Goldwyn and the benefit of his experience as a box office producer, is in line with the plans of United Artists Corporation. Our aim is to provide exhibitors with films that will bring the public into their theatres. The stories announced by Mr. Goldwyn for current production I can say with assurance are of this order.

"With Samuel Goldwyn's prestige in the industry and his experience in all the phases and problems of film play production, I am happy to welcome him into the United Artists Corporation organization."

Samuel Goldwyn took occasion to voice his satisfaction with the new arrangement in confirming the announcement of his entrance under the United Artists Corporation banner.

"My production program for the coming year will be the greatest of my career as a producer, and will measure up in every way to the high standard set by United Artists Corporation in the past," said Goldwyn. "If I were not certain of their standing on their own merits as individual successes, I would not have joined.

"We will spend over $2,000,000 this year in George Fitzmaurice and Henry King productions. My first two selections, 'Stella Dallas' and 'The Garden of Allah' are indications of the pretentiousness of the others to follow. Both in expenditure and production scope the coming year's program will be the biggest of my career as an independent producer."

Rapid Changes In Theatre Circuits

New York Neighborhood Theatres Make Shift—Famous Players Leases House in South and West—New Corporation in San Diego—Emery Amusement Company Becomes Controlling Interest in Rhode Island

ONE of the largest shifts in theatre circuits in New York City, affecting approximately thirty motion picture theatres, took place this week when Rosensweig and Katz sold a third interest in ten of their Brooklyn houses, to Mayer & Schneider. Mayer & Schneider have also purchased outright the Florence and a two-thirds interest in the New Delancey, both of the Allwon circuit.

Booking for the twenty theatres under Mayer and Schneider and Rosensweig and Katz will be done jointly by Al Goldberg of the M. & S. circuit and Dave Rosenweig of R. & K., Mr. Rosensweig handling the Brooklyn end and Mr. Goldberg taking care of New York.

Dave Rosenweig is also the authority for a statement that they will close a deal this week for four more theatres in New York City and that they will soon announce the purchase of a piece of property in Harlem in the neighborhood of 110th Street, where they will erect a 2,500 seat theatre. By the end of the year it is predicted that forty local theatres will be controlled by this combine.

Inasmuch as Mayer & Schneider will come in on the executive board of the Allwon circuit, it is further predicted that Allwon will in all probability combine their booking with the M. & S. and R. & K. circuits.

The theatres affected are the Clinton, Royal, Odeon, Palace, Waco, Majestic, New Law, Delancey, and New Strand, under M. & S. in New York, the Beverly, Lefferts, City Line, Sheridan, Ozone Park, Culver, Adelphi, Concord, Norwood, Our Civic and Kinema (near completion) under R. & S., in Brooklyn. The remaining theatres in the Allwon circuit are the Atlantic Gardens, Golden Rule, Sunshine, Avenue A, New 14th St. and Casino.

Famous-Players' activities in the acquisition of theatres continues, having taken a twenty year lease on a $250,000 theatre to be immediately constructed on the corner of North Tryon and Sixth Sts., Charlotte, N. C. The seating capacity will be about 1,700. It is also reported that Famous-Players will take over the Alhambra at Ogden, Utah. Abe Glassman is the present owner.

At San Diego, Cal., Bush Theatres, Inc., is the title of a new corporation whose papers have been filed, with G. A. Bush, Kent G. Bush and E. W. S. Delacour, all of whom have been connected with the Bush Theatres for some years. The capital of the corporation is placed at $250,000.00. The corporation is operating the Kinema Theatre in Escondido, the Silver Strand in Coronado and the Vista in East San Diego. The Superba, heretofore controlled by the Bush interests, is now being operated by the National Theatres

The Emery Amusement Company of Providence, R. I., owner of three theatres in that city, has increased its holdings. It has bought the Modern and Capital theatres, thereby becoming the dominating theatrical interest in Rhode Island.

Max Nathanson, whose entire theatre holdings pass into the hands of the Emery combine will retire permanently from the local field. In addition to closing out his interests in the two houses, Mr. Nathanson also disposes to the company of all the interest he held as a stockholder in the Emery Amusement Company. He will maintain however, interests in other theatres he owns about the State.

The Modern theatre will undergo extensive alterations during the summer. It is understood that the life of the house so far as pictures is concerned is over. It will be devoted to the legitimate.

In the acquisition of the two houses, A. C. Emery, general manager of the Emery Amusement company, plans to raise the standard of at least one of the houses. The Emery, devoted to second run pictures and vaudeville, will run first run pictures of the highest order.

The present policy of exhibiting second run pictures at popular prices will continue at the Capitol.

Only one change will take place in the personnel of the Emery Company. Matthew J. Reilley, now manager of the Emery-Majestic, will take over the management of the Modern, and Sol Braunig, manager of the Modern since Mr. Nathanson acquired it, will join the Emery company staff and manage the Emery-Majestic. Martin R. Toohey, assistant treasurer of the company, will be production manager and have charge of the Emery theatre. He will continue also, to represent the Emery interests in the Leroy at Pawtucket. William J. Mahoney will remain in charge of the Rialto and Walter Part in the managership of the Capitol. Roger Ferri will continue to direct the publicity of the five houses.

Seider Replies to Beatty

Head of Jersey M. P. T. O. Discusses Rejection of "Greater Movie Season"

JOSEPH M. SEIDER, President of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, this week issued a statement in reply to comment made last week by Jerome Beatty on the organization's decision not to participate in "Greater Movie Season." Mr. Seider said:

"Mr. Jerome Beatty misunderstands the action taken by this organization in relation to the Greater Movie Season as proposed by the Hays organization.

"We are not opposed to the Greater Movie Season idea. We maintain, however, that it would be inadvisable for the theatre owner to participate in the plan as proposed and at the present time.

"In order to have a Greater Movie Season we must have the goods. The pictures must meet the expectations of the public.

"We feel that a movement, such as this, involving the patronage of the movie-going public, should be handled, from its inception, by the Theatre Owner—the retailer—the man in contact with the patron.

"To first run theatres only the good pictures of next year's release will be available. And yet the theatre must take all the financial risk. He will pay big picture prices with only a depleted population to draw from. It cannot be disputed that a good portion of a city's population migrate in the summer to cooler climes.

"We do understand that the theatre owner is not expected to pay one per cent of his receipts in the month of August direct to the Hays organization. The proposition as presented to us involved our joining a group for a concerted effort in promoting this movement. We were to individually underwrite the expense involved, to be met by our contributing one per cent of our receipts during the month of August. The money thus raised to pay for posters, slides, newspaper advertising, publicity stunts and the publicity staff engaged by the Hays Organization.

"Since we have to pay the freight, New Jersey has decided to carry out the Greater Movie Season Idea in its own way—in zones—and in seasons best suited for the zones. The theatre owner is fundamentally a showman. Exploitation is the business of the exhibitor. Greater Movie Season is nothing more than an exploitation idea, to be carried by the theatre owner to the public. The producer advertises and publicizes. The exhibitor exploits. The theatre is best qualified to promote this movement, with the assistance of all distributors and their publicity staffs so as to obtain the desired result for all concerned, the public—the producer and distributor—the theatre owner.

"It is to be regretted that Mr. Beatty did not attend our convention. Had he done so he would have been afforded the opportunity to address us. He would have heard, first hand, our objections.

"A vote was taken only after every theatre owner in the Convention Hall spoke on the subject, and when the vote was taken the roll was called and each member voted either yes, no, or passed. The vote was unanimous in rejecting the Greater Movie Season plan as submitted."

New Jersey Officers to Meet July 28th

No M-G Theatres for Britain, Says Jury; Warner Discusses Plans

TWO important pronouncements were made in London recently on the subject of theatre extension abroad by American concerns. The first was from Sir William Jury, head of Jury-Metro-Goldwyn, Ltd., and endorsed by J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn and now in Europe. The second came from Albert Warner, of Warner Brothers.

Sir William, at a luncheon given in London in honor of Mr. Rubin and E. B. Hatrick, of Cosmopolitan Productions, is quoted as having said: "You have my assurance that we are not building or acquiring any theatres in London. I will be no party to building, but if anyone else does it in the country, we shall have to protect ourselves. My aim and work is distribution and not theatres."

Mr. Rubin declared that Metro-Goldwyn stood back of Sir William's statement. "We do not want to enter into any competition with you," said Mr. Rubin, "We only want an outlet for our product and have no intention whatever of acquiring theatres in this country."

The statement issued in London by Mr. Warner declared that theatres planned by his company for London, Paris and Berlin were solely to be "shop-windows." He continued: "By shop windows, I mean a theatre in London, one in Paris and another in Berlin for instance, for the proper popularizing of the Warner productions. It won't be for profits in the theatres, and it won't mean competing with the exhibitors.

"If Warners ever enter the theatre field in Europe, their activities will be confined solely to such big centres, and they will run theatres for the exhibitor not against him. If you have a high-class product that runs into, say, fifty pictures a year, you must do something to sell them to the public. These 'shop windows' theatres may, on paper, lose money because of heavy advertising and exploitation overhead costs."

Wisconsin to Discuss Arbitration

ONE of the main issues that will come up at the annual convention of the Wisconsin M.P.T.O. in August will be the Wisconsin arbitration system, recently attacked as being unfair to the small town exhibitor.

Fred Seegert, state unit president, has admitted that a number of complaints have been received from exhibitors regarding the present working of the arbitration board.

The arbitration question and a promised keen competition for the different offices is arousing keen interest in the convention, which is set for August 25th and 26th at Milwaukee.

Hays Organization Creates Exhibitor Statistical Bureau

THE creation of an important new department devoted to Exhibitor Statistical Information was announced this week by the Hays organization. Burt New, of Indiana, who has had wide experience in handling organization matters in other fields, has been added to the Hays staff to head the department.

Statistics on the number of picture theatres are being gathered through the Secretaries of the Film Boards of Trade. It was stated that lists already received contain the names of 12,000 theatres and officials of the Hays organization believe the number will run over 16,000.

"A thorough compilation of exhibitor statistics is a vital necessity in the industry," Courtland Smith, secretary of the Hays organization, explained to representatives of the trade press. "We must know the facts and have them available in defensive work and in the interest of exhibitors themselves."

The survey directed by Mr. New is designed to be comprehensive in every way. Information will be gathered not only on the number of theatres, but on seating capacity, local and state censorship and legislative situations, music tax, etc.

It is planned to keep the lists up-to-date by having the Film Board secretaries send in new lists every month.

William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, who was present at the conference of trade paper men with officials of the Hays organization pointed out that more important even than the number of theatres was the number of playing days throughout the country. He also suggested that statistics on censorship be made international in character, and the Hays officials indicated that both of these points would be taken care of in the survey.

Mr. Smith made it very clear that the survey was being conducted in the interest of the whole ndustry and would be available to everybody, including exhibitor organizations and the trade press, as well as producers and distributors.

The Department of Commerce at Washington is co-operating in the compilation of the figures.

One of the important uses to which the statistics will be put is in the coming campaign for complete abolition of the admission tax. It was pointed out that the industry hitherto has been handicapped by absence of authoritative figures in campaigns for its legislative rights.

Urge Postal Increase Defeat

Woodhull Asks Exhibitor Cooperation for a Special Hearing on the Measure

R. F. WOODHULL, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has launched his campaign in an endeavor to defeat the Postal Increase Bill, which is now a temporary measure and will be made permanent, altered or rejected entirely when Congress convenes next December. The bill, which affects parcel post service in the delivery and shipment of prints is in the hands of a special committee of the United States Senate with Senator George H. Moses as chairman. This committee will report on the measure to the Congress.

In an effort to bring every influence and argument to bear, President Woodhull has forwarded a communication to every theatre owner asking his cooperation and has also communicated with the Hon. George H. Moses asking a special hearing for the purpose of offering objections of the exhibitors to the measure.

In his letter to exhibitors Woodhull urges that they write immediately offering their objections and giving all data possible as to additional costs. These arguments will be presented in a brief to the special committee. Exhibitors are also asked to write their objections to their Senators and Congressmen.

The letter to Senator Moses urging a special hearing calls attention to the hardships the increased postal rates will incur on the thousands of neighborhood exhibitors throughout the United States, who have cooperated so valiantly with the Government on all problems of public interest. It points out the fact that Postmaster General New at the sixth annual convention of the M. P. T. O. A. stated that no other unit of business enterprise had given to the Post Office Service of the United States as has the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Announcing Motion Picture News—Mid-Week Edition

IT is our pleasure and privilege to announce that effective this week Motion Picture News will publish a Mid-Week Edition, to be issued each Wednesday.

The publication of this new edition, in addition to the regular weekly News, is an extension of trade service. It is undertaken after a great deal of research and after a most careful study of the small town field and is designed to meet the needs and demands of the theatre owners in the very smallest communities. Its contents follow out, so far as possible, the suggestions of over 500 small town exhibitors, who have told us by questionnaire and in many cases, verbally, the kind of a paper they prefer.

To these suggestions we have added our own ideas, born of many years publishing experience in this highly specialized field. We have given much study to the problem. We think we know what the small town man can use and must have, if he is to be successful.

The casual observer in the industry, may inquire why we consider it necessary to publish two papers to serve one field.

Our answer is briefly this:

There are two fields in the exhibiting end of motion pictures today—not one and it is our conviction that no publication can shoot at two marks and hit either of them.

So, briefly, without many details that could be given if space permitted, this is the reason for the new edition of the News.

Do not consider the Mid-Week Edition a new publication, but rather, as we said in the beginning, an extension of an old one—Motion Picture News—established in 1913 and since its inception dedicated to the welfare of the motion picture industry in all its branches and that includes the several thousand little theatres in the several thousand little towns, scattered from one end of the land to the other.

Mr. Hatrick said that European exhibitors are keenly alive to the value of news reel films but that they are somewhat handicapped by the failure of producers of the reels there to supply a service which meets the demands of the public.

Weekly Edition of Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

Productions listed are new pictures on which reports were not available previously.

For ratings on current and older releases see MOTION PICTURE NEWS—first issue of each month.

KEY—The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage rating of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

Essay Contest in Houston on "Madame Sans Gene"

One of the highlights of Manager Harry VanDemark's splendid campaign on "Mme. Sans Gene" at the Queen theatre, was the Essay Contest, "Why Is Gloria Swanson Your Favorite Movie Star?", run in the Houston Chronicle a week before opening date. Letters had to be addressed to "Gloria Swanson Contest Editor," care Chronicle, and were limited to 100 words. Each letter drew a Sans Gene Gold Coin. Every tenth letter drew a souvenir program in addition to the coin, and a grand prize of a large framed photograph of Miss Swanson was awarded to the writer of the essay acclaimed the best by the judges. The distribution of Gold Coins in this manner greatly enhanced their value, and the stunt in general gained valuable publicity for the attraction at minimum expense.

1,000 Souvenir programs were distributed in a unique manner calculated to increase their advertising value. To the first 900 ladies purchasing tickets on Saturday morning (opening day) Manager Van Demark gave a program. This stunt was most successful, all programs being disposed of by three o'clock. Night prices prevailing Saturday made this performance doubly valuable from a box-office standpoint. The remaining hundred programs were used in connection with the Essay Contest and for presentation to city officials, etc.

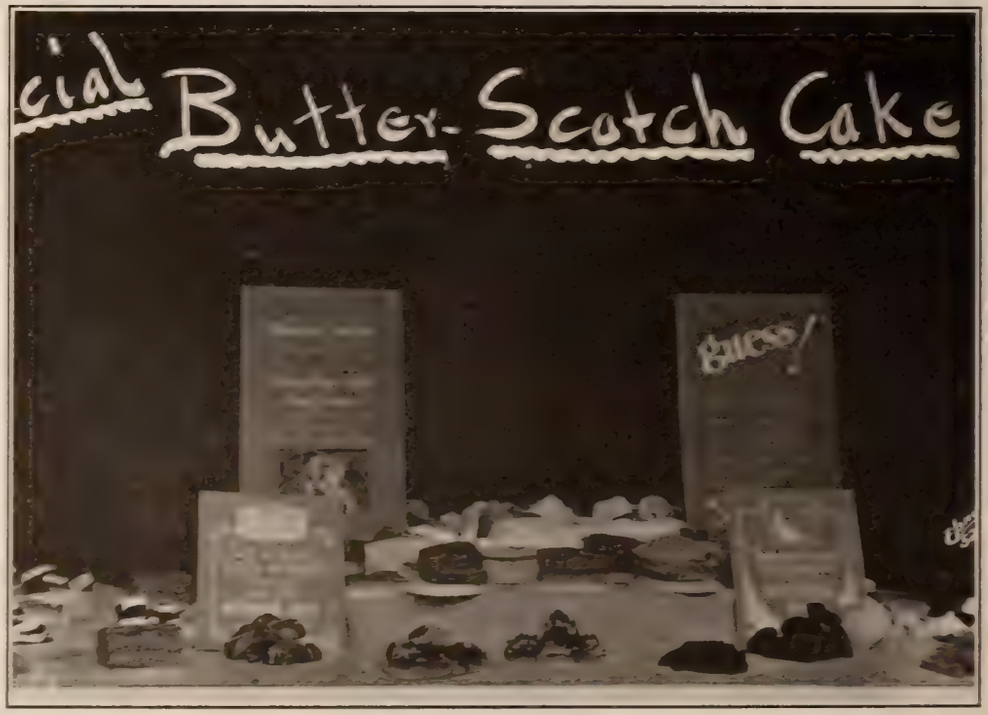
2,000 Swanson post cards were distributed to women and girls in the Queen the week preceding the "Sans Gene" run. These were eagerly accepted by the fans, in fact another 1,000 could have been used to good advantage. In contrast to the distribution of post cards at the Queen, 2,000 Swanson heralds were given away at the Capitol the week before showing. That not a herald was wasted is due to the fact that it is an unusual fine piece of literature with a strong appeal to fans as a souvenir. 1,000 rotos were also given to the ladies attending the Queen a few days prior to opening date.

Seven of the large 14x17 photographs of the star were used as the basis for window cards, which were placed in prominent Main Street windows. These very excellent locations were secured at the cost of two theatre tickets each to the seven merchants, an expenditure well justified by publicity gained.

A tie-up with Carnegie Library proved a valuable advertising medium. Theatre Close-Up carried an announcement that books on "Madame Sans Gene," Napoleon and other notables of that period were available at the Houston Public Library. In return, the librarian placed a notice on the library bulletin board telling where the picture was showing.

"Thief in Paradise" Aided By Brilliant Display

Exploitation of "A Thief in Paradise" in Owensboro, Ky., at the Empress theatre, began a week before the three-day showing. Manager G. M. Pedley, of the Strand Amusement Company's interests in that city started the campaign by festooning the lobby with hearts and masks, which remained up as teasers until the showing. Then a big heart made of beaver board, as high as the entrance to the lobby, was placed on the curbing in front of the theatre daily—one side, toward the street, being bright red with the name of the play and the dates, with a mask at the base. On the other side was placed an eight-sheet cut-out with the stars outlined, with a smaller heart and a mask at the base. These were interchanged during the whole week of the showing.



Saturday before the showing a tie-up with McAtee, Lyddane & Ray, one of the leading dry goods stores of the town, was effected. A draped one-sheet with the dates of the showing occupied central space in the draping of a bathing suit window for this occasion.

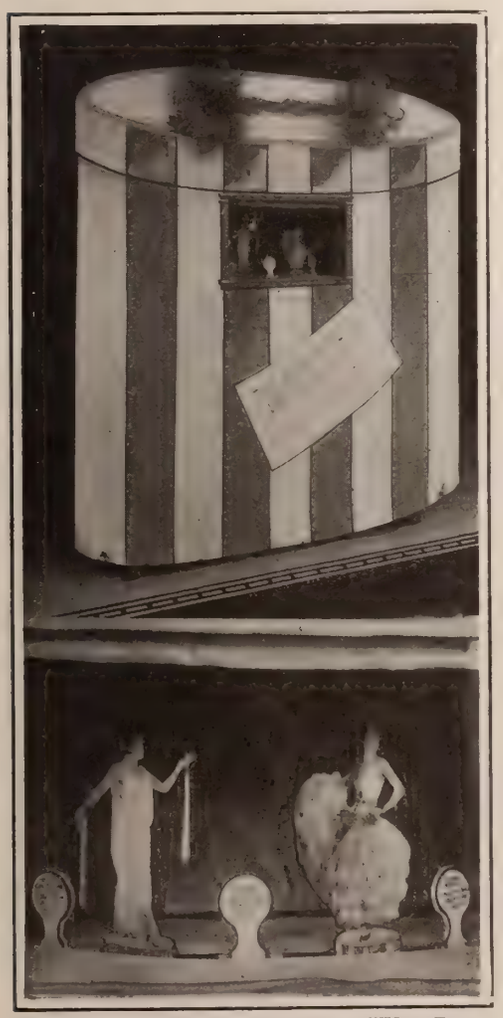
Seattle Strand's "My Son" Presentation Attractive

A very beautiful set was arranged by the management of the Strand theatre, Seattle, for "My Son" by a combination of colors against a gauze background. The name of Nazimova, the star, was done in white, outlined in blue on both sides of the box office, above the doors into the theatre.

The scenic effect of a banner clear across the lobby, above the doors was produced with small cut-outs behind which were lamps of different colors casting a sort of silhouette effect over the setting which was a coast scene with ships in the background. The transparent banner was illuminated at night.

A cut-out in the lobby was made from the three-sheet with photos mounted on one side. Both panels of the exterior ship effect were done in natural colors.

Window tie-up with the Federal Bakery on "The Goose Hangs High" (Paramount) arranged by Manager Guy O. Keuimer of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville.



Knife Stuck Through Many "Spaniard" Heralds

Much of "The Spaniard's" success at the Imperial, Charlotte, was due to two novel ideas conceived by Manager Geo. E. Brown.

One, was the distribution of 1,000 heralds, 100 of which were placarded throughout the main business section, each with a 'knife' stuck through the middle of it with "The Spaniard" showing beneath. Being posted in locations where hundreds pass hourly, these 'knife-heralds' proved excellent exploitation mediums. The 'knives,' which stood the theatre 9 cents a piece, gave 'punch' to the stunt.

The other, was a direct tie-up with the local radio broadcasting station, which made an announcement that six single theatre tickets would be given to six persons listening in on the night before the opening of "The Spaniard" at the Imperial. The announcer also added his personal endorsement, having previously reviewed the picture. The six free tickets brought in a like number of paid admissions, with the radio reaching 2,000 potential patrons, all of which was reflected in the opening day's attendance and receipts, which were the best in weeks with the exception of "Madame Sans Gene."

The standard paper and newspaper advertising was used, with special marquee and lobby displays, expressive of the Spanish atmosphere of the photoplay. Illuminated by red and yellow lights, these exhibits made quite a flash.

Varied Stunts for "Lost World"

Unusually Good Campaign Staged by W. K. Hollander at the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago

THE Chicago run of "The Lost World," was ushered in at the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago, by an unusually brilliant exploitation campaign staged by W. K. Hollander, publicity director for Balaban & Katz.

Hollander was particularly fortunate in obtaining a co-operative arrangement with the Chicago Daily News. Three weeks before the opening of the picture, the newspaper began the serial publication of "The Lost World" which had appeared in its columns about twelve years ago. The illustrations then used were reproduced for the present serialization. Upward of half a page was given daily to the story.

To advertise the serial, the Daily News used 560 24-sheets and 1,600 3-sheets in and around Chicago. In addition, the serial was advertised in page advertisements in the Daily News and in about fifty suburban newspapers; also in announcements on the first page of the Daily News.

About half a million reprints of the first six instalments were run by the Daily News. One hundred thousand of these were distributed by Balaban & Katz in its chain of theatres, and the rest were mailed by the Daily News to its subscribers and through its news dealers. Each of these reprints carried the information that a very remarkable production had been made of "The Lost World" by First National and Watterson R. Rothacker and that it was to be shown at the Roosevelt theatre soon.

The Daily News used the pictorial paper of First National for its 24 and 3-sheets to advertise the serial story, substituting its own reading matter for First National's text.

A week before the opening of the picture, the Daily News gave the theatre management 175 of its boards which were covered with 24-sheets, the paper being of a different character from that which the Daily News used to advertise the serial story. In return for the courtesy and co-operation of the Daily News, the Balaban and Katz theatres, in announcing on the screen of its various theatres the coming of "The Lost World" to the Roosevelt, asked their patrons to read the serialization of the story in the columns of the Daily News.

"The Lost World" was shown to Cardinal Mundelein. A review appeared in "The New World," a Catholic publication of 70,000 circulation.

A prize contest was arranged through the Military Commander of the High Schools by which the various military battalions competed in marksmanship. The prize for the best shooters were theatre tickets to "The Lost World." A dinosaur was outlined with chalk as the target at which the boys and girls shot. To announce the contest, First National's rotogravure section on "The Lost World" was used as a supplement to the official paper printed and distributed by this school organization.

The Chicago Public Library distributed "The Lost World" heralds and had printed cards 12x14, suspended in the street cars advertising books of prehistoric nature. On these cards "The Lost World" was displayed in good size type. This street car tie-up with the Public Library, was gratis as was a 14x22 card advertising the showing of the picture at the Roosevelt which was placed in every station along the elevated line.

Cash prizes and free tickets to the theatre while "The Lost World" was being shown were prizes offered for a drawing contest in the Chicago Journal and an essay contest in the Evening Post. A radio was used to broadcast the information about the picture through a song called "The Lost World." A "Lost World Night" was planned in one of the cabarets in Chicago.

Wrecked Flivver in Garing "Oh, Doctor" Lobby

The engagement of "Oh Doctor" at the Garing, Greenville, played to the best business this house has enjoyed for sometime. Manager Chas. H. Amos's exploitation was greatly responsible for its success, the highlight of which was the special lobby display.

An old wreck of a Ford car was placed in the center of the lobby with a cut-out of Reginald Denny in the driver's seat, showing him being hurled in the air. Directly in line with this figure was a cut-out of a nurse standing against the side of the lobby wall with arms outstretched as if waiting to receive him. A large card attached to the car carried the message:

IF YOUR PRETTY NURSE IS LEAVING BECAUSE YOU ARE WELL—GET SMASHED UP AGAIN—"OH DOCTOR"

A huge banner with scenes from the photoplay and wording—Reginald Denny in "Oh Doctor" extended across the entire top of the lobby front.

An excellent window display with a local drug store showed Denny in bed attended by a nurse. The entire window was filled with hospital supplies and attracted no little attention. This window was put in four days in advance of showing and remained throughout attraction's run.

Booth placed on busy thoroughfare are during the run of "Lilies of the Streets" (F. B. O.) at the Fulton theatre, Jersey City.

Striking Lobby Display for "Dante's Inferno"

Manager W. F. Brock's lobby on "Dante's Inferno" at the Strand, was one of the most attractive displays ever arranged for any picture playing Knoxville.

The entire front of the theatre was decorated with display paper on the attraction with streamers of red crepe paper. The exhibit was uniquely lighted by special red fuses, loaned the theatre by a railroad friend, which were placed behind the sets on each side of the lobby. With the remaining lobby lights changed to red, the effect was startling.

The display was brought to the attention of the people of Knoxville in a most striking manner. On Sunday night before the opening, the exhibit was kept illuminated long past midnight, after all the city lights were extinguished. The red glow in the total darkness enhanced the weird, uncanny atmosphere and drew the eye unresistingly.

A week before play date, two flashy one sheets made from "stills" were placed conspicuously in the lobby where they were seen by patrons as they passed in and out. Several days before showing of picture, three oil paintings were placed in store windows, one in the city's leading silk shop and the remaining two in vacant windows in prominent locations in the downtown section.

The regular campaign was started two weeks in advance with the usual newspaper advertising, increased billing with 15 extra one's, 5 three's, 1 six, slides, 3,000 heralds, etc.

The Strand theatre, Nashville, arranged this window display with a drug store for the showing of "Playing With Souls" (First National).

Fashion Book Souvenirs for "Dressmaker From Paris"

An important factor of Manager E. D. Turner's campaign on "The Dressmaker From Paris" at the Imperial, Asheville, was the distribution of 100 special Fashion Books on this attraction to the first 100 ladies attending the Saturday matinee, two days before play date. The appeal of these books was reflected in the favorable comments of the lucky ladies who received same.

Several excellent window tie-ups were effected in connection with shops dealing in women's attire. These windows displayed 22 x 28 still boards carrying scenes from the picture. Thirty small window boards with stills were placed in prominent windows in the shopping districts.

A special banner was made for the arch underneath the marquee. A huge stillboard, used inside the theatre a week prior to opening, was moved to the outer lobby during the run.

The usual billing was employed with the distribution of 5,000 theatre Close-Ups, 8 000 Magazine Programs, etc. Newspaper advertising was along regular lines with special 'art ads' as an added feature.

Tieup With Drug Company for "Sally" on Coast

An unusual tie-up was made on the showing of First National's Colleen Moore picture. "Sally," at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, and F. M. Head, sales merchandise manager of southern California for the Owl Drug Company.

The Drug Company prepared a special "Sally" Sundae while the picture was being shown. Its three hundred soda dispensers in Los Angeles and its suburbs wore a little badge—a piece of green ribbon about one inch wide and four inches long, on which was printed in black, "Try a Sally Sundae, 20c, as delicious as the production is good. See Miss Colleen Moore in 'Sally,' Loew's State Theatre."

The Sally Sundae was also advertised on cards and on the mirrors of the drug store.

Syracuse Scene of Strong "Declasse" Campaign

A newspaper publicity tie-up for a motion picure that is far out of the ordinary was used by Cliff Lewis, publicity director of the Strand theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., for "Declasse." The tie-up was made with the Syracuse Journal.

A week ahead of the showing of "Declasse," the Journal published the fac-simile of a telegram from Miss Griffith in which the star requested the Journal to act as sponsor at a theatre party at the Strand during the showing of latest release. She requested the Journal to invite 100 women and girls of Syracuse to attend this party as her guests.

Lewis and the advertising manager of the Journal worked out a scheme which benefited the classified advertising columns of the newspaper at the same time gave "Declasse" an unusual amount of publicity in its columns.

The Journal announced in daily stories that it would on the Friday before the showing print in its classified advertising columns the names of the hundred women and girls whom it was going to invite. An advertisement of the picture, carrying an announcement of Miss Griffith's theatre party, was run on the classified ad page of the paper in addition to the publicity stories.

The paper's advertising manager sent out at his own expense a letter to 2500 prospective advertisers explaining that those who took a classified ad during this campaign would not only be sure of an unusually large number of readers for their advertisements, but would be permitted to send in the names of two or three women or girls to be invited to the party. Fifty of those to be invited were to be selected by the Journal itself. As the date for the announcement of the names approached, the advertising manager sent out another bunch of 2,000 letters reminding possible advertisers of the opportunity.

A story was also run in the paper announcing that any advertiser who placed a classified ad for six insertions might give the name of one person to be invited to the party.

The campaign was a success, not only for the Strand but for the Journal also, the classified ads being greatly increased during this publicity campaign. The names of the women and girls invited were published among the classified real estate ads in the issue of Friday. Mr. Lewis' idea proved one of the best that has been worked in Syracuse of late for any picture, and is one that can be used by exhibitors in any town. Manager Walter D. McDowell go. behind the campaign.

Telephone Operators Boost "Daughters of Night"

Edward J. O'Keefe, director of the City Square theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., secured the co-operation of the Bell Telephone company in exploiting "Daughters of the Night," by inviting all the telephone operators, about three hundred in number, to review the picture, which is based on the romance of a telephone girl.

The result of this stunt was that it gave the theatre an unusual medium of publicity, for it had the three hundred operators talking to their acquaintances everywhere about the film. A concrete evidence of this was at the time of the special showing, when every girl brought one or more friends who paid for their admissions. The average showed there were two paid admissions accompanying the operator to the show, besides the regular patronage of the theatre.

Candy Kisses Advertise on "Kiss in the Dark" Run

Several days in advance of his showing of "A Kiss In The Dark," at the Strand, Birmingham, Manager Faunce distributed 5,000 special boxes containing two candy kisses each. These were given away on the streets by three young ladies, carrying attractively decorated crepe paper baskets, effectively tied with colored ribbon bows. The boxes carried a picture of Adolphe Menjou, title, cast, theatre and play dates. This stunt was achieved at a nominal cost and was far reaching in effect.

The lighthouse in the lobby display was equipped with a flasher socket. The opening was covered with orange silk with a 150 watt light in back acting as a reflector, the beam of orange light being visible even in the daytime. The portholes of the ship were also cut-out and backed with lights, while the word "dark" in the title was blocked out on a piece of white glass. The special lighting added much to the exhibits attention value.

When "Seven Chances" (Metro-Goldwyn) played the Capitol theatre, Little Rock, Manager R. T. Newton arranged this front consisting of art ads and catch-lines.

Strong Opening Campaign Given "Excuse Me"

A strong exploitation campaign was recently waged by C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, in connection with the opening of Loew's new Temple theatre in Birmingham, with "Excuse Me." This playhouse, completely remodeled and reconstructed, is now among the most luxuriously appointed theatres in the South, and its opening became, in consequence of the campaign which Haug conducted in collaboration with E. A. Vinson, enterprising manager of this playhouse, an event of the first importance to the community.

Three weeks in advance of the opening two hundred 3-sheets were posted all over town announcing the opening. Fire hundred 1-sheets were posted at the same time, and 500 special window cards were distributed. Two weeks before the premiere 500 specially printed 1-sheets were posted and 50 window cards were exhibited in gold bronze frames in the heart of the city.

Permission was secured from the City Commission to erect ten cloth banners in the busiest section of Birmingham. These banners were 3 by 12 feet long. One hundred street car dash signs were carried by cars two weeks in advance, and 21 Yellow Cabs carried banners also. Fifteen Red Top Cabs were decorated with banners announcing the showing and 8 Nu-Grape trucks carried large size banners also.

Merchants were vigorously solicited with the result that every advertisement in the Birmingham News carried, on the Sunday preceding the opening, lines congratulating Mr. Loew on opening the most beautiful theatre in the South. Special stories and photographs were printed in this issue.

A miniature train, captioned the "Excuse Me" Special, was on exhibition in the lobby for one week in advance of the premiere and throughout the showing.

Two pretty young girls, about 12 years old, and an old man carrying an ear trumpet, exploited the picture effectively by boarding cars and discussing the picture and the opening of the theatre. Most of the conversation was carried on by the young girls, who talked very loudly into the ear trumpet carried by their aged companion. This stunt caused enormous interest and was the talk of the town.

An immense banner hanging next to the City Hall, which burned down shortly before the opening, was observed by 40,000 people who attended the fire and by other thousands who afterward visited the ruins of the building.

Good Millinery Tie-up for "The Night Club" Run

In exploiting "The Night Club," Manager John J. Friedl and Publicity Directory Raymond B. Jones, of the Palace theatre, arranged a splendid tieup with Fields Millinery store in Dallas.

Cut-Out Heads on "Playing with Souls" in Lobby

Manager G. P. Banniza, of the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn., assisted by W. R. Arnold, exploiter, gave "Playing With Souls," a campaign that strongly directed the attention of the public to the picture.

The lobby display was one of the most striking the Strand has had. A large cut-out head of Jacqueline Logan was placed in the centre of the entrance, underneath a banner clear across the width of the lobby carrying in white letters the title of the film.

At one side of the lobby, high up, were the cut-out heads of "Buster" Collier and Clive Brook. On the other side, still higher, was a cut-out bust of the devil, with a string running from his hand to the cut-out heads of Miss Logan, Collier and Brook.

The customary slide and trailer, newspaper advertising and billing were done. Three thousand heralds were distributed in parked automobiles, in business offices and private dwellings.

Steffy Gives "Learning to Love" Strong Display

A unique display was used by Manager Steffy of the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, on "Learning to Love."

In the shell over the marquee was placed a cut-out of the star kissing one of the men in the cast. Directly under this cut-out was the name of the star with a chasing border of frosted lamps.

The star's name and title used over the box office were of the same design. All of these lamps were used on the chasing border flasher which was sure to attract the attention of the passer-by.

Cut-outs from the posters were placed in every nook and corner of the lobby. The color combination was orange and black.

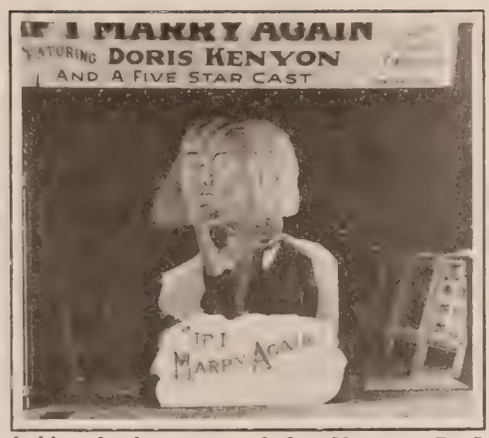
Dress Designing Contest on "Dressmaker From Paris"



Inspired by the fashion review in "The Dressmaker From Paris," Manager E. B. Roberts conceived the ingenious idea of conducting a Dress-Designing contest in connection with his showing of that attraction at the Majestic theatre, Austin, Texas.

The contest was started two weeks in advance of play date with the cooperation of the Adam-Johnson Company and the Austin-Statesman. A blank figure of a woman was printed in the newspaper daily, along with the announcement that for the best design sketched over this figure, preferably of a "party" frock, the Statesman would give an order to the Adam-Johnson company for a $29.50 dress to be selected by the winner. For the next ten best designs offered, the award would be two tickets to the Majestic to see "The Dressmaker From Paris." The next 20 best models would receive one ticket each, good for a performance at the Majestic. To aid contestants, a special pamphlet of new Paris styles, based on those shown in the photoplay, was compiled by the Statesman. This booklet could be obtained upon application from Mrs. Rucker, head designer of Adam-Johnson's, and also the judge of the contest. Contestants were allowed to compete as often as they wished, all models being mailed to Mrs. Rucker with sender's name and address, not later than Saturday preceding opening of attraction.

The contest netted 600 drawings, the winning design being printed in the Statesman with designer's name and a description of the gown. A list of the other prize winners' names also appeared in the columns of this newspaper.

The contest with its decided feminine appeal was a tremendous success as a publicity builder for the picture, and more than justified the nominal expense attached to putting it over. In this instance, the Adam-Johnson company gave the theatre the dress offered as first prize at cost, and also stood half the expense attached to the printing of the 200 fashion programs on "The Dressmaker From Paris," distributed through their store.

Considerable valuable publicity was given the theatre by a front page article regarding the special orchestra engaged for the three days' run of the photoplay, featuring the song, "The Flapper Wife," dedicated to the heroine of a serial being run in the afternoon paper.

Lobby display arranged by Manager F. J. Miller of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., for "If I Marry Again" (First National). It consisted of a large beaver-board cutout of a sphinx with cutout of the stars in front.

Swanke Has Striking Front on "Flirting with Love"

Arthur Swanke, publicity and advertising man for the Mission theatre, El Dorado, Ark., obtained a very striking theatre front for "Flirting With Love."

A banner, the imitation of a parted theatre curtain, was used above the entrance to the lobby. The field was yellow, the top caption in red while the cut-out letters of the title were in black. Foliage of both bottom corners were in black. In the centre of the display was a three-sheet cut-out with cut-out strips around, backed by lavender crepe paper.

Reduced Taxi Rates Given for "The Last Laugh"

Through a tie-up with the Seattle Taxicab Co., Robert Bender, manager of the Columbia theatre, Seattle, secured banners on the doors of all the Yellow cabs in town, and editorial and advertising space in the company's paper, "The Yellowgram," which goes to taxicab patrons, announcing his showing of "The Last Laugh."

The banner read: "25c off on all Yellow cab fares to 'The Last Laugh' at the Columbia." When a cab deposited its passengers at the Columbia, the doorman gave them a coupon good for 25 cents on the meter charges. When they departed, another coupon was given them which was similarly honored by their chauffeur.

Florist Exploit Showing of "The Beauty Prize"

The leading florist of Evansville, Ind., was recently induced to exploit the appearance of "The Beauty Prize" at the Strand theatre by devoting an entire window to the cause. This display was built up around a central section featuring American beauties, besides which appeared announcements of the showing and other advertising material. This window attracted much attention, being in the busiest part of the retail district.

Charles Glickauf, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, supplemented this feat by achieving a second tie-up with a prominent music store, which contributed a display of Victrolas and other musical instruments. Tie-up cards were placed in two beauty shops and in two restaurants. Three oil paintings were exhibited in other windows of the retail district, and 4,300 pay envelopes printed with an announcement of the run were distributed by factories and department stores of the town. One thousand heralds were given away and the town was lavishly posted as well. There was, in addition, a special lobby display.

This window tie-up was arranged by Manager J. L. Cartwright of the Rialto theatre, Chattanooga, for the showing of "Code of the West" (Paramount). Photos with small date card were placed in prominent locations.

YOUR IDEA

"PLUGGING" MUSIC

WHEN you have a musical number of merit closely tied up with a picture you are playing, don't be content with merely playing the number during the showing of the picture. Make it the outsanding musical hit of the town for the moment. You can do it if you give it the same concentrated exploitation you would put back of a picture. We have an example before us of how this was done at little cost by Frank Burns, the exploitation director of the Beacham theatre, Orlando, Fla. Burns describes the campaign as follows:

"A month before 'Sally,' was due to play at the Beacham theatre, Orlando, I got out a postcard to a thousand names. Card asked the question 'I Wonder What's Become of Sally,' and adising that the Beacham would announce the answer at a later date. Five thousand small cards with the same copy proved an excellent follow-up when given away on the streets. On the given date the Beacham soloisst, duly advertised, sang the answer to the question, namely 'Sally's in the Movies Now,' with a special stage setting as a background and slides for both songs thrown on a silk curtain behind him.

"Three nights of packed houses heard this answer. Another thousand postcards were sent to the same people with the new copy. Five thousand more small cards were given away on the streets carrying the new question and answer copy. The connection was made and everyone in Orlando was singing, whistling and playing 'Sally.' The leading music store gave us a window display and plugged 'Sally' hard for us. The biggest department store used approximately forty inches in the newspapers to advertise the song and the fact that they would instal a loud speaker in the lobby to be used during the engagement. A neatly arranged lobby of lithographs plus the loud speaker stopped hundreds.

"Suffice to say, 'Sally,' is the most popular piece in Orlando at this time due to this plugging, and sheet music and records are selling like hot cakes."

INTERESTING THE NEWSPAPERS

ONCE every so often some exploitation stunt, engineered by a scheming press-agent, catches the eye of the city editors on the leading metropolitan newspapers. It awakens their news interest and brings a host of eager reporters hot-footing it to the scenes of "battle" to unconsciously spread the word about the new motion picture which makes its bow to the public a few days later.

"Fifth Avenue Models" was the picture responsible for the latest "break" in newspaperdom. Joe Weil, the Big U exploiteer, New York, engineered the stunt which caught on and made papers like the Herald-Tribune, the New York Times, and World, open their columns generously to the idea.

It all came about because "Fifth Avenue Models" was booked into the Piccadilly Theatre on very short notice. It was impossible to line up the proper kind of fashion show in a few days so that Weil was forced to seek other channels of publicity. He hit upon the idea of arousing talk about models by forming a Fifth Avenue Models Association to protect the poor little working girl who show the latest in What-this-is to the admiring throngs of shoppers. As time was very pressing he had to enlist the young ladies of the Universal home office to aid the idea.

Carefully prepared notes were written to all the leading city editors who were addressed as "Manager of Reporters." These letters laid stress on the fact that Fifth Avenue Models were being mis-represented in the news—that they did not smoke or drink or marry millionaires, but were home-loving girls. The letters were hand-written on violet paper and a bottle of perfume was spilled over them. The letters informed the editors that a meeting would be held at the Breslin Hotel to organize the girls. Miss Dorothy Pensel headed an aggregation of Universal girls at the meeting at which there were twelve girls present, one dozen reporters and ten photographers. The newspaper response was wonderful. All the New York papers, without exception, carried stories on the Fifth Avenue Models Association the next day and the day after. Rotogravure sections flashed the pictures. Columnists kidded the models. The NEA Service, United, Universal and other syndicates covered it.

Weil tied up the publicity by a card flash in front of the Piccadilly lobby and also by snipping the town with novel window cards reading:

MASS MEETING! Bring Your Friends—FIFTH AVENUE MODELS—Piccadilly Theatre—Saturday, May 9th."

This was further tied-up by a pretty "ballyhoo-ess" who paraded the streets with a minature sandwich sign outlined in flowers, carrying the above message.

Accompanying photographs of the lobby display and the ballyhoo may be seen at the botom of this page.

WORKING UP LOCAL INTEREST

A CLEVER example of the art of capitalizing "local interest" for the exploitation of a film play was given when Stanley J. Gates, manager of Loew's Regent theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., contrived to have Mrs. Helen R. Martin, of that city—author of the novel, "The Snob," on which the screen production of that name is based—give an interview to the home newspapers just before "The Snob" was shown in this theatre on June 22, 23 and 24.

The Harrisburg Evening News printed an especially chatty story in which Mrs. Martin gave her estimate of the play, starting her enthusiastic approval of the accuracy with which her book was interpreted in the screen version. The newspaper made the comment, in its own behalf, that "it is rarely that an author is found who is pleased with the motion picture adaptation of her own novel, for so often the picture producers take great liberties in changing the plots of the stories."

Mrs. Martin appeared in person at one of the showings of "The Snob" in Harrisburg—another detail that Manager Gates contrived to arrange—and made a brief address from the stage which the audience received enthusiastically.

AND OURS

MORNING MATINEE PLAN

THE U. C. theatre of Berkeley, one of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., circuit, recently inaugurated a series of "De Luxe Kiddies Matinees" under the auspices of the Berkeley P. T. A. federation, Mrs. M. T. Heavey, president. These programs take place every Saturday morning from 10 a. m. to 12 m. Groups of mothers and educators from the federation assist Manager Frank C. Burhans in the selection of the programs.

The ideals followed in the selection of these programs are that only such films be run as are educational and produce the proper emotional reaction; preferably films that send the youngsters home with new ideas and thoughts. The stage features are rendered only by child performers, sometimes by Berkeley children when they can be secured. No element of jazz is allowed to creep into any part of the program. Fairy stories are told by a charming young woman known as "Aunt Polly," who has already endeared herself to the children. The U. C. theatre "Big Brother" leads the youngsters in community singing and talks to them informally, and it is amazing the response and enthusiasm he is able to arouse.

The films that have been run thus far are the first few episodes in the Chronicles of America, a historical film produced under the auspices of Yale University. There are thirty-three episodes in all, which will, therefore, cover thirty-three weeks. Animal pictures are always interesting to youngsters, and each week a nature picture is run, for instance, on the "Life of Bears," or "Salmon Fishing," or "Dogs." Whenever it is possible a story film is run when the subject is suitable for children. Recently "Hans and Gretel" was run.

Dancing and singing and the playing of musical instruments make up the stage features. Occasionally a novel act is secured, such as the personal appearance of King D, the Belgian police dog with his trainer. The dog performed and his master told the youngsters in the audience how to make their household canines do "tricks" and how to care for their pets.

It is gratifying to note the response that has been shown to this novel effort. Even the first week found the line of youngsters waiting for admittance a block long, and every week following has found the theatre auditorium more nearly filled. It is estimated that fifteen hundred Berkeley youngsters attend these matinees each week. Groups of mothers from the Parent-Teachers associations act as chaperones and see that no youngster goes astray and that all reach the proper hands after the matinee. The youngsters themselves show intense interest in every feature that is put on and applaud loudly as evidence of their enthusiasm. When the last few minutes arrive for community singing, their enthusiasm is spent in singing well selected songs.

This effort on the part of the Berkeley Federation of Parent-Teacher Association, with the whole-hearted cooperation of Manager Frank C. Burhans of the U. C. theatre, should stimulate other communities in their direction of better pictures for children. Only in this way is it really possible to segregate "grown-up" shows from those suitable for youngsters. The proceeds received from these matinees, after the actual expense of the U. C. theatre have been deducted, go to charity under the direction of a committee appointed from the federation, and each week sees a substantial check go to some worthy charitable organization.

HAVE YOU A LITTLE HOSTESS?

SOMETHING of an innovation for Broadway houses has been installed at B. S. Moss' Colony theatre in the form of a hostess. Miss Maude Willis, a petite blonde has been engaged for this position with her headquarters on the mezzanine floor of the Colony.

Miss Willis, in addition to conducting visitors on an inspection tour of the theatre, will also assist patrons, particularly women and out-of-towners, in preparing shopping tours and pleasure trips throughout the city.

Incidentally, this service is provided gratis and represents but one of the many features for patrons' comfort in vogue at B. S. Moss' Colony.

CLUB CONTACTS

IN the smaller communities, the personal contacts between a theatre manager and local organizations like the Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis, Rotary and Lions clubs, and so on, act both directly and indirectly. Directly, through the opportunity of building up business on a particular picture through special club exploitation; and indirectly, through the build-up of good will and friendly relations in the community. It is interesting, therefore, to note the plan and program followed by Manager Roy Smart of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., when he had charge recently of "Theatre Day" at the Kiwanis club.

"The organization's assembly hall was decorated appropriately for the occasion, including star photos and 22x28 lobby cards featuring leading characters in each production booked for the season. Two attractions were emphasized especially. One was "The Thundering Herd." For this attraction a rotogravure sheet was distributed at each place at the dining room table. The historical coins used to advertise "Madame Sans Gene" were also used souvenirs, one being distributed to each guest.

For the Kiwanis program, a local girl gave a castume dance, while the chairman of the Better Films committee gave a talk on the theatre and the industry, prior to the presentation of a special film.

This special film was arranged for the occasion. It was made up chiefly from bits of film collected from the past pictures of the most prominent members of Kiwanis and a group picture made some years ago came in for additional service. This film was arranged in a series of "Who's Who," and grouped in that were some baby pictures and pictures of small boys. Copy and captions for the film were conceived to effect a historical style.

The entire program was immensely appreciated as acknowledged by enthusiastic applause, while the members of the club generally acknowledged Manager Roy Smart to be one of the most efficient advertising men in his town. Which speaks well for the Noble, his theatre.

A CORRECTION

In the July fourth issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS a story appeared in this department under the heading "Short Subject Recognition" which, commenting on theatre programs, mentioned "Saxe-O-Grams" Saxe Amusement Co.'s house organ as being published by the Milwaukee theatre, Milwaukee. We wish to state at this time that "Saxe-O-Grams" is published by the Wisconsin theatre instead of the aforementioned House.

HORSES STAR IN GREAT PICTURE, SAYS STEVENS

"BLACK CYCLONE."

BY ASHTON STEVENS.

EVEN if you have a poor opinion of motion pictures as a substitute for the stage, please go to Orchestra Hall and see "Black Cyclone." If you don't you will miss one of the oddest and most interesting films of the year. It's a great picture.

Horses are the principal players in this swift and spacious show, wherein the human actor serves only to point a parallel and bring up the tail. Here wild horses play and plot and love and hate and fight and win, even as man in the melodramas. Here horses are as romantic as members of the Lambs Club, with all the chivalries, villainies, passions, treacheries and loyalties of their two legged brother—only presented horsily. It is a novel and fascinating picture show and I feel that before the week is old it will be the topic of 5,000 dinner talks.

THE ebony stallion Rex is star of "Black Cyclone," and what a star is Rex! If ever "Hamlet" is filmed with an all-stable cast, I am for Rex as the Prince of Denmark.

Rex has his Hamletish moments in this piece—moments of lurking fear and receding courage, as when the bullying black-and-white stallion called the Killer has beaten him hoof to hoof and tooth to tooth, and made away with his mare, the gray and slightly placid Lady.

It takes time, and a little of the melodramatic taint of man, to screw Rex' courage up to the point where he will tackle the Killer and win back his Lady. And the time is all spent for your credence and pleasure, causing you to feel that Rex behaves as no ready-made leading man, but according to a definite equine psychology. It is easier to believe Maeterlinck's account of the stallions that were mathematicians after you have seen Rex play "Black Cyclone."

REX deserves a good notice, and I am doing my best by him. He needs it. Somebody gave him and his fellows a most unkind cut in Variety, saying, if you please, that they weren't horses at all, but only clever German toys magnified!

Now, if Variety had said that about the human beings who are occasionally employed in this picture, we might let it pass. But Rex a toy like one of the manufactured monsters in "The Lost World"! Well, if Rex isn't real, John Barrymore is a marionette and I am a typewriter.

Good morning!

Everybody's going to say it, so I might as well travel right along with the crowd—Rex, the handsome horse star on the screen at Orchestra hall, acts with almost human intelligence.

He's a great, big beautiful black—the ebony wonder that made "The King of Wild Horses" a picture to talk about. Patient and continuous training has made of him even a more smooth and resourceful actor than he was in his first film, and in "The Black Cyclone" he hands you thrill after thrill.

Such a long-legged, wistful-eyed colt he is when you first see him, ambling over the Wild Lands with his mother! A big rattlesnake gets busy and Mother is no more. The baby stands alone in a great big world that seems to be getting bigger every minute.

Timidly he essays to join a herd in the valley below, but the leader of the mares, a powerful paint horse with a pale, cold eye, doesn't want any weaklings to bother over and he shows the little black baby a pair of heels that send him scurrying up the hillside.

From then on Rex shifts for himself. He gets older and wiser. Such small mishaps as what happens to him when he tries to get honey from some bees before the bees are through with it teaches him to think before he acts.

He grows up into a sheik of a horse and has no difficulty at all in winning the Lovely Lady for his bride. He has trouble keeping her, though, for The Killer has also seen her and thought her fair, and The Killer is no rival to sneeze at.

Rex's affairs of the heart become exceedingly dramatic. So do those of the man who saves him from a tragic death, and through the latter part of the film the stories of man and horse are intermingled.

No two ways about it—if you love animals you'll be crazy about "The Black Cyclone." There's something graceful and wild and free and pretty about it—like a flag in the wind.

Preceding the feature is a Grantland Rice sport movie that shows you how the animal stars are trained in Hollywood. There are regular schools for them. Rex is a pupil and you see him at his lessons with his training. Interesting as the dickens.

See you tomorrow!

BLACK CYCLONE GREAT LOVER AMONG HORSES

By ORLANDO NORTHCUTT

If you have a hankering to see a motion picture that is out of the ordinary and one that is packed with romance and thrills, glance at "Black Cyclone" at the Rialto. It is a truly remarkable film.

BLACK CYCLONE matinee idol.

Rex, who performed so creditably as the equine hero of "King of the Wild Horses," is cast as the principal character in "Black Cyclone" and he carries the honors with the aplomb of a

Hal Roach, who wrote the story and produced the picture, has fashioned an intensely interesting romance of a prancing, proud, impetuous wild horse in love with Lady, a lovely dapple gray mare. The humans in the photoplay are merely incidental to the unraveling of the plot.

Rex is left a motherless waif of the hills when his parent is struck down by a rattler. He shifts for himself and eventually meets Lady. It is love at first sight on the part of Rex and he proceeds to win her. He elects himself her protector and the two roam the hills together.

The Killer, the villain—and a mean pinto with a bad eye this fellow is—usually takes what he wants. He takes Lady from Rex. The latter follows her and is caught in the mire of quicksand. He is saved by a cowpuncher and scampers off to find Lady. He succeeds in getting her away from the Killer's herd and they live happily ever after.

Fred Jackman, who directed, has one one of the finest bits of directing the screen has to offer. The patience he must have exercised to gain the effects that appear in the finished picture is unusual.

The battle between Rex and the Killer, the fight with a pack of wolves trailing the nearly exhausted Lady, the stampede of the wild horses are photographic and dramatic highlights of a film that will unquestionably prove one of the greatest box office successes of the season. It is an animal picture far above the average.

Unprogramed but worthy special mention is the comedy relief, the Pest, a moth-eaten little burro with a cynical expression. He is a clown by right of birth. The introduction of this fellow is a clever bit. "Black Cyclone" deserves the highest praise one can visit upon it.

NEW HORSE OP'RY

"BLACK CYCLONE" IS KING OF FILM THRILLS

By Grace Kingsley

Rex, the wild horse, runs away with film honors on the Rialto and at the Rialto this week. "Black Cyclone" is a new thrill for the tired picturegoer.

We are being led slowly, surely, and painlessly to the day when real woodlore and animal lore are going to have as definite a place in film drama as the mushy love story and the slap stick. There are all Kipling's jungle stories and there are the Seton-Thompson tales to be done. What charm they will gain in the filming! Though, to be sure, I don't envy the patient and perspiring directors who have to put the animals through their paces. Why, even now the movement is gaining impetus in the revealing of "A Lost World," which opens soon at Grauman's Million Dollar Theater, following the run of "Beggar on Horseback," and which shows the tragedy and comedy in the lives of prehistoric animals.

In the meantime, "Black Cyclone" is making just a bit of headway in the revealment of animal psychology and animal lore. For instance, the human hero knows how to get a horse hero out of the quicksand. And we are shown the mighty fight between two beautiful horses for the leadership of a wild band of equines.

Also in the meantime "Black Cyclone" provides magnificent entertainment. One, never for a moment, sees the human guiding hand. Marvelously beautiful horses (and just the sight of a horse is a treat nowadays anyway) battle for the love of the beautiful mare, Lady. Wolves chase Lady, and the horse hero Rex saves her—bites, kicks, beats off the wolves. And Rex kills a wild cat, too. Rex, grateful, consents for once to be ridden by the human hero when the latter's own horse is shot under him as he rides to the rescue of the human heroine. The storm and stress of animal conflict runs all through the picture. And even where it is pretty romantic and far-fetched, it still has fresh thrill and appeal, especially as all the action on the part of the animals seems spontaneous. I hope that Fred Jackman will undertake to go a bit deeper into animal action and phychology. He is a genius along this line.

Quinn Williams, Kathleen Collins and Christian Frank do all that is necessary to bring out the talents of the equine stars, Rex, Lady, and the Killer. I don't how how they feel about being in these horse operas, but we are grateful to them for lending their talents.

The Moray girls yesterday afternoon were sweetly vocal, except, when a bit sharp apparently from nervousness, and were a pr... stage picture. A Hal Roach kid comedy and other features added to the charm of the bill.

What The Short Subject Means To The Exhibitor

Vaudeville Sets Example for Picture Men

By S. J. Maurice, Special Representative Serial Dept., Universal

(Editor's Note.—This is the concluding article in the series dealing with the proper presentation and exploitation of short subjects written especially for this publication by Mr. Maurice.)

WHAT the value of short subjects is to the exhibitor, and how this value may be increased enormously by giving them a big flash in newspaper advertising has been pretty well demonstrated in the preceding articles of this series. I showed how some exhibitors' business was actually saved and that of others doubled by devoting at least forty per cent of the advertising space to the comedies, the short westerns, the serials, the striking phases of the news-reels and the cartoons.

If house managers who have read these articles still are not awake to the potentialities of this splendid material, they might learn something from vaudeville. They may not be aware that there is hardly a big or little vaudeville theatre in the country that does not use short pictures to strengthen its bills and put in a laugh or a punch that otherwise would be lacking. And they are no longer used merely as "chasers" or to open a show, but are given important positions on the bill, being considered as much of a draw as the standard acts on the program.

I talked with vaudeville managers in every city I visited in my recent swing around the circle. Without exception they declared they could not get along without the "fillums." Some of them used two reel westerns or serials, others pinned their faith to comedies and animated cartoons like "The Gumps," Aesops Fables or Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell": some favored the Literary Digest, the Stereopticks or the Bluebirds; others swore by Hal Roach's "Our Gang," all of them consider a snappy news-reel like the International as absolutely essential.

What interested me particularly was that many of these vaudeville managers advertised their pictures just as they did their human acts. Now, if the vaudeville people recognize the value of these subjects, how is it that so many picture exhibitors, who are supposed to be alive to the value of everything in films do not? Mr. Exhibitor, you should be ashamed to let somebody who is really not in your game beat you at that game!

One of the surest indications that short subjects are to play a bigger part than ever in pictures is the fact that every company makes them or is going to make them and will produce more of them next year than ever before. Universal is going to make an especially great play with its short stuff next season. Its comedy program, its serial, its two reel westerns with Edmund Cobb, Fred Humes, "Pewee" Holmes and Jack Mower will set a pace that never have been struck before. The Buster Brown series as planned is sure to be a knock-out. Universal has always been famous for its serials, but will out-do itself in this respect this year. The tie-ups already accomplished with the great newspapers all over the country to advertise and play up these chapter adventure stories are unprecedented. Leading newspapers in 44 of the big cities and 1000 smaller ones are printing novelized versions of the serials and are giving them great display space.

Fox has a short subject campaign outdoing anything of the kind this company has ever undertook before. Pathe and Educational, specialists in the line, are redoubling their efforts. F. B. O. is extending its field enormously. Following up their "Fighting Blood" and "Go-Getters" and "The Pacemakers" this firm is now at work on "The Adventures of Maisie" with Alberta Vaughn that has unusually attractive aspects.

There are short subject stars now coming to the front who will soon be in the feature class. Look at Charlie Puffy, Carl Laemmle's most recent importation, Harry Langdon, Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian and Clyde Cook. They are a hit on any bill and right now are worth almost as big type in the advertising as the stars with whom many are programmed. The exhibitor who buys and does not play them up is simply throwing away an opportunity to increase his receipts. Blind—or rather "dumb" is what I call an exhibitor who fails to grab all the benefit possible from what he thus has in his hands.

Picture history proves that short subjects are the training ground of the most profitable and popular stars. It is there that real talent is discovered and developed. There are a dozen other comedians, comediennes and real actors than those mentioned above who are in two reelers that exhibitors are showing today who are going to be famous in the next two or three years. The wise exhibitor will capitalize this talent right now. He will watch his own shows and when he sees a "short" go over with a smash, the next time he plays one of that series and with those actors, he will tell his patrons about it in his newspaper advertising.

Why does he advertise Valentino, Denny, Gibson and Swanson? Because he knows his people like them and will come to see them. Does not this same thing apply to Langdon, Desmond, Daughtery, Art Acord, Wanda Wiley, Our Gang, the Pacemakers or Clyde Cook? If your patrons laugh or sigh at them today, tell them in your advertising when you are going to give them this opportunity again. Ten years ago exhibitors recognized this very patent fact with Bill Hart, Charlie Chaplin, Ben Turpin and later with Harold Lloyd and Buster Keaton. Well, there are Harts, Chaplins, Turpins, Lloyds and Keatones in the rough right now and the exhibitor who is on the job will look for them and make them.

Their success is your success—don't forget that Mr. Exhibitor.

In concluding I would say again to the exhibitor—the short stuff is almost half your show; give it half of your advertising space. You've got to have it, you can't get along without it. Your patrons demand it, so why not tell them in advance what it is to be? They may not be attracted by your feature—they may prefer the feature at the opposition house, but your short stuff may pull them into your place if you will only wise them up to it in your advertising.

So once again, PLAY UP THE SHORT STUFF!

Kinograms Staff Reorganized

J. V. FitzGerald and Herbert Hancock Join Company as Associate Editors

J. V. FITZGERALD and Herbert E. Hancock have been appointed associate editors of Kinograms news reel, which is distributed by Educational, it was announced this week. Forrest Izard, for the past five years managing editor of Kinograms, will remain at that post.

The announcement stated that the appointments of FitzGerald and Hancock to the editorial staff was the first move in a program of expansion and reorganization which will be carried out by the company.

FitzGerald is a newcomer in the film field, but brings with him a brilliant record as newspaper editor and writer. For ten years he was connected in various editorial capacities with the New York Morning World, leaving about seven years ago to accept the position of Sporting Editor of the Washington Post. After serving in this capacity for three years he was made editorial writer for a year, and was then promoted to the City Editorship, which he held for three years more, until joining Kinograms. Mr. FitzGerald is a native of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and was educated in New York University.

Hancock is well known to the news reel world, having organized Fox News six years ago. For four years Hancock was director of Fox News, and then he organized and headed the Fox educational department. Previously he had been connected with the International Film Service in various editorial and directorial capacities. This experience followed a newspaper career of more than fifteen years. He was educated in Canterbury, England, and is a member of the Author's League of America.

Mr. Izard, who is one of the best known executives in the news reel field to-day, has steadily built up Kinograms to its present position among news reels. Born in Chicago, Mr. Izard completed his education in Harvard University. After his graduation he went into newspaper and magazine work, being connected with the Boston Transcript for many years.

Mr. Izard entered the film field shortly before the war and has continued in it ever since. Five years ago he joined Kinograms and in a short while was given full charge, which he has held ever since.

Allyn Butterfield, pioneer cutter of news reels, will continue to occupy the position he has held since the inception of the reel. The remainder of the personnel has not been changed.

Fox Organizes Special Staff

Will Sell Short Subjects Exclusively Under the Direction of Fred Quimby

FOX Film Corporation has organized a special sales department to function independently in the disposal of its short subject product. Fred Quimby is at the head of the department and has as his assistant G. A. Hill. They have organized a special staff of field men to concentrate solely on the short film output. This staff will have nothing to do with the selling of the dramatic offerings of the company.

Through Quimby's field men the exhibitor will be fully informed of every phase of little features and therefore will know before hand just what he is booking. This change came about because of the increasing demand for short comedies. In discussing the change in policy Quimby said:

"The exhibitors have come to realize that good short subjects and a well balanced program are just as essential to success as good feature offerings and they are just as careful about booking their short subjects as they are about their features. In many cases I have found exhibitors paying most attention to short subjects.

"Recently there has been a most pronounced demand for the higher class two-reel comedies. Exhibitors eagerly ask for them and contracts are signed at good figures.

"So pronounced is this quick awakening I am going to travel a number of miles to find the reason and fill the demand."

Displays Frozen Fish to Exploit "Balto" Film

A display of frozen fish, encased in huge cakes of ice which were shown in the lobby of the Victoria theatre, proved a novel and arresting stunt to exploit "Balto's Race to Nome," the Principal Pictures three-reel production offered by Educational, in Harrisburg, Pa. The display was designed by C. Floyd Hopkins, general manager of the Wilmer and Vincent theatres in Harrisburg and Reading.

Twenty-four different species of fish were frozen in the ice cakes and the theatre offered a prize of a season's pass to the patron who identified the largest number of species represented in the display.

The stunt, which was part of a vigorous campaign to exploit "Balto's Race to Nome," received wide publicity in the columns of the newspapers. As a gauge to the efficacy of the stunt it is reported that the short film received 65 column inches of "reader" space as against 11 column inches actually paid for by the theatre as advertising.

"Daddy Goes A Grunting"

Pathe—Two Reels

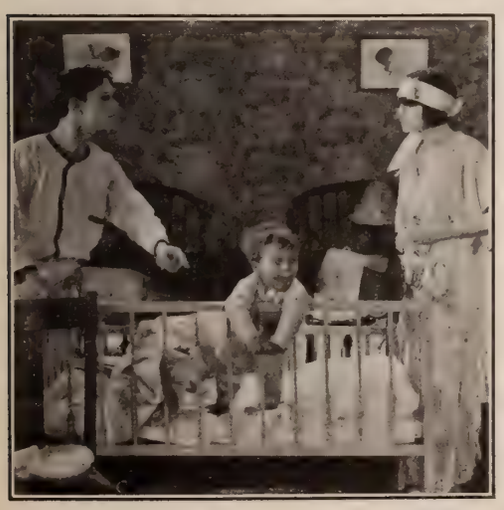
(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

ANOTHER "domestic difficulties" farce is supplied as a vehicle for Glenn Tryon, the Hal Roach starred comedian, in this two-reeler directed by James W. Horne. The foundation as well as the superstructure of the comedy is that star of infant actors, "Husky" Hanes.

The play deals with the horrible consequences which face a young husband when his wife, to teach him a lesson, absents herself from the menage, leaving a note which states that she has gone forever and advising him to take good care of the baby. Tyron's amateurish efforts in the performance of the duties of nurse-maid make up the major portion of the picture. A story of considerable substance is planted but it does not bloom, the director having placed the emphasis on physical action and slapstick incidents.

There is much in "Daddy Goes A Grunting" to win the laughter and applause of the picture fans. The sequences in which the hero struggles with the baby's intricate garments, the rather stirring episode showing the infant on the edge of a fire-escape several stories high, and the climax in which the solicitous neighbors ply the husband with antidotes for a poison he believes he has swallowed, are certain to meet with a hearty response generally.

The poison episode, which, by the way reunites husband and wife in perfect story fashion, has been built up with some skill by Director Horne. The hero's cries for help bring assistance from all quarters, each first-aider introducing a cure-all of his own, with the result that the hero is walked back and forth at a terrible rate, suggested as a necessary item in the treatment of the malady, until he becomes exhausted. Then they pour milk, raw eggs, castor oil and sundry and various liquids down his throat, the outcome being that the patient puffs up like a dirigible receiving a full charge of Helium.



Tyron and "Husky" Hanes are ably supported by Kathleen Collins in the role of the wife and several well known Hal Roach troupers in minor parts.

The Cast

The Husband.....Glenn Tryon
The Wife.....Kathleen Collins
The Baby......"Husky" Hanes

Directed by James W. Horne.

The Story.—A complaining and fault-finding husband is taught a lesson when his wife "runs away," leaving him to darn his own socks and take care of the baby. The attempt to give the baby its bath results in the father getting his feet badly burned in the boiling water he permits to run into the tub. This is the beginning of a series of difficulties which culminate when the husband thinks himself poisoned, an event which brings a laughable climax and a true-to-form reunion of husband and wife.

Glenn Tryon, "Husky" Hanes and Kathleen Collins in a scene from "Daddy Goes A Grunting," a Hal Roach comedy for Pathe.

Classification—Domestic comedy well produced and provided with a quantity of gags.

Summary—One of the best comedies Glenn Tyron has had since his promotion to star comedy roles in the Hal Roach productions. It is a fast-moving and nicely produced presentation of a domestic comedy. The picture should score in theatres of all classes.

"Hot and Heavy"

Educational-Mermaid—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

EDDIE NELSON is featured in this slapstick comedy which depends for its laughs on the usual hokum that strives to get over humorous stunts when the scene is laid in a cafe. There is the spilling of soup and the promiscuous tossing of food that make a mess of the place and everyone in it. But there is some good comedy in this one and the plot, if it can be called such, is a little different than the usual run.

Nelson has the role of a broken down vaudeville artist who wanders into town out of luck and out of a job. He incurs the wrath of the husky bouncer of the Blue Bird cafe and the latter is laid out in the chase when a telegraph pole falls upon him. The proprietor of the cafe sees his bouncer prone in the gutter with Eddie standing beside him and gives Eddie credit for having rendered him horizontal. Therefore Eddie falls heir to the job of bouncer.

In his new job he serves in various capacities and is called upon to execute all of his skill when a slumming party arrives at the cafe. Various stunts are pulled with the arrival of the party. The dancers become entangled with each other as well as with the food. A trick turtle is permitted to wade into the soup and eventually becomes pinned to the rear of the pulchritudinous matron of the slumming party, amid the wildest consternation up to that point. It becomes wilder however, with the return of the deposed bouncer as soon as he regains his equilibrium. He descends upon the cafe with his gang and orders them to get the first guy he throws out. Said bouncer is, himself, the first to make his exit and he does so in turn through every door in the place. Each time his own henchmen further add to his humiliation. The story ends with the general melee at its height.

THE CAST

The new bouncer.....Eddie Nelson
The Girl.....Estelle Bradley

A Mermaid Comedy. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Photographed by Dwight Warren. Supervised by Jack White.

The Story—Eddie Nelson, broken down vaudeville actor wanders into town broke and out of luck. He incurs the displeasure of the bouncer in the Blue Bird cafe and in the chase that follows the bouncer is knocked out by a falling telegraph pole. Eddie gets credit by the proprietor for the knockout and falls heir to the bouncer's job, which he holds only until the original bouncer comes to and has time to recruit his gang. The gang descends upon the cafe and the general melee which follows terminates the story.

Classification—A slapstick comedy replete with fast action.

Summary—There are a number of amusing incidents in this comedy which brings out all of the old hokum usually used in a cafe scene. In addition there is some new stuff which is fairly amusing. The picture should be appreciated in the neighborhood houses.

"Sneezing Beezers"

Pathe—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

THIS Mack Sennett production is designed for summer entertainment, the suggestion of coolness entering in the form of some elaborately done snow scenes. It is a decidedly slap-stick affair with a basic idea which might supply material for much clever burlesque of the romantic stories about mythical kingdoms and princes and princesses outcast through the machinations of ambitious usurpers.

The audiences of the average theatre should find the work a pleasant pastime and occasionally an uproarious one. From the opening scenes in which the dethroned king of Necko-Shavia is shown as the proprietor of a chili con carne emporium in an American city, until the king, the princess and the taxi driver land in the frigid regions of the big snows there is a constant parade of comedy items of the tried and proven sort as well as a dash here and there of something a bit clever in the way of a gag.

Billy Bevan appears as the taxi driver who steals a bowl of chili and in retribution is forced to drive the king and the princess to Necko-Shavia. Andy Clyde is the king, and every inch a comedy king in this part. The striking Madeline Hurlock is seen as the princess, appearing to especial advantage in the costume left in the northern cabin by "an Eskimo chorus girl." Kewpie Morgan and John J. Richardson are other prominent contributors to the comedy action.

"Sneezing Beezers" is a bit extreme in its efforts to amuse but it does amuse and therefore there can be no quibbling about this or that or the other thing. It is irresponsible comedy action, having the thread of a plot and several boisterous titles. It should prove ideal fare for the entertainment of screen fans seeking to escape the oppressive humors induced by the humidity of these July dog days.

The Cast

Chauffeur.....Billy Bevan
King Andy.....Andy Clyde
Princess.....Madeline Hurlock
Crook.....John J. Richardson
Revolutionist.....Kewpie Morgan

By Jefferson Moffitt and Frank Capra. Directed by Del Lord.

The Story—An exiled king supports himself and his daughter by serving genuine chili con carne at a rapid-service lunch counter. He receives word that he will be crowned if he returns to Necko-Shavia and engages a taxi driver to take him there. Upon arriving in the country he is set upon by a group of crooks and the three adventurers set out in the taxi to flee the schemers. They are followed to a land where the snow-fall is heavy and there the conflict is on in earnest. Skiis furnish a form of locomotion that is both speedy and stirring. The villains kidnap the princess and sail away with her in their aeroplane. But Billy, the taxi driver, daringly negotiates a high jump on his skiis and overtakes the plane in mid-air, thus effecting a thrilling rescue.

Classification—Slapstick comedy elaborately produced and capably acted.

Summary—While nothing strikingly new in the way of gags appears, this is a speedy and well presented slapstick offering. The play burlesques the romantic melodramas about mythical kingdoms. While the material for much good satire is present this is subordinated somewhat to straight comedy of action. The director has aimed at the "sure fire" effects and is successful in achieving them.

"The Polo Kid"

Universal-Century—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

EDDIE GORDON is the star of this two-reel Century that is chock full of horse play and alleged humorous incidents. There is nothing they have forgotten to put into the picture in an effort to get laughs. That they will get many of them is assured, but the film reveals too many ridiculous incidents that are too far-fetched to be funny. A condensation of the story, which is not a bad one, would make the picture more effective, particularly if some of the overdone comedy was eliminated.

The opening shots of the polo game give promise of better things that do not follow. In fact the polo game has no connection with the balance of the story, which has to do with a street cleaner and his persecution by a fat politician.

The trouble starts when the street cleaner carefully sweeps a pile of papers to the side of the road just as a big touring car pulls up with a party of pretty girls from the polo game. The politician attempts a flirtation just as the exhaust from the auto scatters the papers about his head.

Then the horse-play starts fast and furiously. The fat man gives chase to the street cleaner and runs himself into the lake, from where he is extricated by the street cleaner with the aid of a harpoon projected with unerring aim to that part of the anatomy such implements invariably find.

Later, when Rod, the hero rescues a pretty girl from a frightened horse and conveys her to the mansion, which is her home, it develops that this is also the home of the fat man, who is her father. Rod is trying to revive the girl as father enters and thinking the intruder a burglar, the trouble starts all over. As the girl revives the situation is explained and Rod is welcomed with open arms. It then develops that the butler and a yegg are in reality robbing the safe. Rod gives them battle all over the house and winds up a real hero. As his reward the father tears up papers and scatters them all over the place, that Rod may continue in his regular occupation.

The star is supported by players who strive hard to get the most possible out of their parts, which however, as in most of these comedies, are sadly overdone. Gordon is a clever comedian who gets the most out of every humorous situation.

The Cast

Rodny Lownsdale, street cleaner.....Eddie Gordon

A Century Comedy, story and direction by Jess Robbins.

The Story—The street sweeper gets himself in wrong with the town politician when his scrapings are blown into the face of the latter by the exhaust from a touring car as the politician is attempting a flirtation with a group of beauties returning from the polo game. The hero is hounded by the fat man until he rescues the daughter from a frightened horse. He is then welcomed into their home and when he exposes the butler and a yegg robbing the house safe he is rewarded by the politician who scatters papers over the place to give him further occupation.

Classification—A fast moving comedy designed for laugh purposes only.

Production Highlights—There are some exceptionally good shots of a polo game. The titles are fairly good and there are many hilarious incidents.

Summary—A routine comedy that is almost too prolific in its humorous situations. Fast actions abound from start to finish, though some of it is too ridiculous to be productive of laughs. And in all, however, it should please the followers of these short comedies.

Scene from "Sneezing Beezers," a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy released by Pathe.

"A Battle of Wits"

Universal-Mustang—Two Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS is another of the series of Mustang Westerns featuring Josie Sedgwick and proving her a most capable actress is this type of picture. It's rather an illogical story, but then what Western isn't. It is sufficient that they have plenty of fast action with the heroine in the midst of all of it and invariably gaining the upper hand. Just why the villain should exercise the direst villainy in order to make a girl marry him who in reality loathes him is one of the mysteries that will probably never be explained in the western picture.

Miss Sedgwick apparently revels in the fast action stuff and just as apparently loathes the villain, who would fasten the crime of horse stealing on her brother in an effort to force his unwelcome attentions upon her and claim her for his wife. She wins in the battle of wits however, and is spared that martyrdom.

Hodge is the villain who sends the sheriff's posse wild-riding after Teddy Ramsay's brother. He is the only one who has seen the horse thief in action and he is ready to identify him as Teddy's brother on sight. But Teddy beats him to it. She overtakes her brother on the road and accuses him of horse stealing. But brother is wise to the whole plot and reveals it to Teddy. So she secretes him in a shack where she changes clothes with him and leads a merry chase to Hodge, who has been spying on them

Hodge overtakes her in another of these convenient deserted shacks, which seem to abound in that western country. There he intimidates her to the point that she agrees to marry him at once if he will not incriminate her brother. But meantime brother has been busy on his own behalf. In fact he has captured the real horse thief and turned him over to the sheriff's posse. Then they all ride wildly to the office of the Justice of the Peace and arrive there just in time to keep Teddy from saying "I Will" to the villain. Then as they seem wont to do in the west they all decide to settle this particular case out of court, which in reality sentences the villain to a flogging at the hands of Edmund Cobb, the hero of the story.

The Cast

Teddy Ramsay.....Josie Sedgwick
The Hero.....Edmund Cobb

Directed by Ernst Laemmle. A Mustang picture. Ben Kline, cameraman.

The Story—Miss Teddy Ramsay is the darling of Cross X Ranch. Her brother is accused by the villain of horse stealing and will be exonerated from the charge only if she agrees to marry the villain. The girl outwits the latter, as her brother captures the real thief. She is about to yield to the demands of the villain as the sheriff's posse brings the real culprit in. The Justice of the Peace then continues with the ceremony, but with the girl and the sheriff as the happy participants.

Classification—A fast action western, with a somewhat implausible story, but nevertheless interesting.

Summary—This is a picture that is bound to appeal to the lovers of the short westerns. It is well acted by a competent cast; it reveals some exceptionally good riding and its action is continuous and thrilling.

"Alice, Stagestruck"

(Alice Comedy-Winkler—One Reel)

THE youthful spirit of make-believe is very well expressed in the newest of the Alice Comedies. The youngsters put on an Uncle Tom show—and the manner in which the "props" are conceived indicate plenty of imagination from the director, Walt Disney. Little Margie Gay plays both Eliza and little Eva—and there are some bright gags employed in getting her across the ice. The bloodhounds (just a lot of mongrel pets) give chase—and a string of stuffed toy dogs are also "pulley-ed" across the stage. The property "man" in the flies forgets to shake the confetti and accidentally drops a huge bundle of papers on Margie's head.

At this point the action fades into the strip cartoon with Julius protecting the girl. A quintette of dogs give pursuit—a daschhound allowing his long back to become a settee for his playmates. Julius picks up the cabin and easily scales several perpendicular peaks before he pitches it in the water. As the hut floats away, Margie comes out of her faint. The piece has a lot of ingenious tricks, is smartly titled—and carries a real "kick." We recommend it for any program.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Lucky Accident"

(Universal-Bulls Eye—One Reel)

THIS is another of the series featuring the rotund comedian, Charles Puffy and it shows him to better advantage than he has been seen in the past. Puffy is the mistaken victim of an automobile accident and is carried off to a hospital much against his will, as his mother has just planned for him the meeting with the girl of her choice.

The hospital is more tasteful to him when he discovers the type of nurses in attendance there. One in particular strikes his fancy and he is well satisfied to remain until the time of his engagement approaches, when he makes his escape, to discover at his home awaiting his coming, the beautiful nurse. There is a lot of good comedy in the picture and it will be appreciated in nearly any house—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Learning How

(Pathe—One Reel)

SEVERAL branches of sport are employed to illustrate the point that athletic accomplishment, like everything else, is the result of study, training and much practice, in this Grantland Rice Sportlight film. There is plenty of the out-of-door quality about the piece and so it should be especially suitable for summer programs. There is considerable space devoted to Helen Jacobs, National Junior Women Tennis Champion, and the splendid style and form of this star of the courts justifies the prominence the reel gives her. It is a pleasant and interesting short.—T. C. KENNEDY

Pre-release Reviews of Features

Cyrano de Bergerac

(Unions Cinematagrafica Italiana-Atlas—10 Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE film production of Rostand's heroic drama has been magnificently achieved. Any one who has seen Hampden in the play or read the text might naturally turn thumbs down on the film. But if they go to see this picture they will not be disappointed. It is a sincere, faithful transcription—one that catches the true spirit of romance. For fear of arousing criticism the sponsors have made almost a literal adaptation—for there is one scene after another just as Rostand wrote it. This may act against it for it makes a photographic record of the play instead of being a film conception of it. But anyway you take it, you must admit that it rides on a high road of romance.

Nothing is changed to make something different from the play. The sponsors have kept faith with Rostand. Yet, arguing from the standpoint of "box-office," it is a picture which must be heavily exploited. The vast army of picturegoers are not acquainted with the play—not having seen Hampden play the role. But they have a treat in store for them. The moods of the story are admirably caught by Pierre Magnier who, in the title role, gives a magnificent performance. The manner in which he makes love to the wistful Roxanne by sacrificing everything is something which always appeals to the heart. He is sensitive—is Cyrano—sensitive about his enormous nose. Very few actors could have brought out this character with such grasp upon the emotions. Roxanne is finely portrayed by Linda Moglia. The tragic scene in the convent garden wherein Bergerac dies is beautifully expressed.

As for the production it is excellently mounted. The atmosphere of Paris of 1640 is well suggested. There is a wealth of detail and background—and the plot builds steadily to its climax without getting away from its subject matter.

THEME. Romantic drama of a celebrated swordsman whose gross features make him sacrifice his overpowering love for a girl—his romance being worked out by proxy.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The sympathetic and colorful performance by Pierre Magnier in title role. The duels. The comedy. The prelude to the battle. The convent garden scenes. The atmosphere of Paris of 1640. The death of Cyrano. The color and movement.

DIRECTION. Has approached Rostand's great work with fine reverence. Keeps characterization ever dominant. Executes drama with feeling Gets fine detail and shows painstaking care with atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Use trailers. Exploit as film version of dramatic masterpiece. Play up the color and movement. Might put on a prologue with people attired as in picture. Get out the best people in your town.

DRAWING POWER. Well advertised this should draw. It has fine color and movement and is splendidly acted. Has heart appeal and good enough for finest houses—yet its story will be understood by every type of picturegoer.

SUMMARY. A magnificent costume picture carrying gorgeous scenes. Has comedy and pathos, color and movement—and holds the interest all the way. Exceptionally well acted. A faithful transcription of the play. Fine heart appeal and especially strong in romance. Filmed in natural colors. One of the best from Europe.

THE CAST

Cyrano	Pierre Magnier
Roxanne	Linda Moglia
Christian	Angelo Ferrari
De Guiche	Umberto Casilini

The Duenna	Gemma De Sanctis

By Edmund Rostand. Directed by Augusto Genina.

SYNOPSIS. Celebrated poet and soldier wins fear and respect because of his swordsmanship. But because of his sensitiveness over his enormous nose he feels himself an outcast in matters of romance. Has a great, abiding love for beautiful girl and loves her by proxy. In the end she realizes the secret in his heart. The knowledge comes too late for he dies a glorious death.

The Texas Trail

(Stromberg-Producers Dist. Corp.—Five Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HARRY CAREY has a likely western here. It doesn't follow the orthodox plan showing a villainous foreman rustling cattle—with the cowpuncher being suspected for the crime. None of this stuff is written into the picture. The star has taken a tip from Mix and Gibson—that what westerns need nowadays is a saving grace of humor. And this particular horse "opera" gallops along with a pleasant vein of comedy. The melodramatics are not unduly stressed—and when a more or less tight situation develops the director and the players sort of laugh it off as it were.

The central figures are a cowboy and an Eastern girl. The latter has made her first trip to the West and colors it with romance. Her idea of cowboys has been gathered from seeing them in the movies. So when she is insulted by a villain who gets the drop on the hero her illusions are shattered. The heroine proceeds to get a "kick" out of it all by masquerading as a highwayman. Along with the incident featuring her capture there is an episode dealing with the robbery of the hero bringing home the money which will lift the mortgage. First the villain is imprisoned, then the hero—and the comedy moments here carry quite a measure of laughs.

Really the plot has practically nothing to stand on. But it manages to keep going because of the new twists given the orthodox incident. The heroine is made the victim of a few practical jokes before she has her romance with the cowboy. The minute he dresses up in chaps, sombrero, et al, her heart goes right out to him. And her opinion of him changes when he rescues her from the ornery bad man. Everything works out O. K. here. The girl had recovered the stolen money—and the hero had saved the girl. There is first rate atmosphere to give the story a proper background. The acting is good—with Carey keeping himself in restraint—a habit with him. Yet this mood is perfectly applicable for such a story. Ethel Shannon plays the heroine with spirit and charm.

THEME. Western romantic melodrama of cowboy and Eastern girl—the latter being disillusioned over the West. Masquerades as highwayman, recovers loot from villain and is rescued by cowboy.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The comedy incident. The scene on train as heroine becomes enraptured with the great open spaces. Scene when hero is held up and robbed of the money. Scene when girl is captured in her highwayman disguise. The jail episode.

DIRECTION. Keeps it moving along with bright incident. Doesn't take it too seriously—and injects a good comedy relief. Refrains from loading it down with heavy melodramatics. Frames it against appropriate settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Bill this as a different western—one with humor as well as action. Play up Carey as being ideal for the role of present-day cowboy—not the movie type. Play up the idea of Eastern girl trying to pep up the West.

DRAWING POWER. Among Carey fans this should do business. O. K. for average houses.

SUMMARY. A bright little number—which gets somewhat away from the beaten path through its comedy incident. Several new twists have been added—which take it out of the familiar rut. Not much to plot, but it succeeds in sustaining interest.

THE CAST

Pete Grainger	Harry Carey
Betty Foster	Ethel Shannon
Ring 'Em Foster	Charles French
Dan Merrill	Claude Payton
Ike Collander	Sidney Franklin

Adapted from novel, "Rangy Pete," by Guy Morton. Directed by Scott R. Dunlap.

SYNOPSIS. Eastern girl comes West—her first trip. Her idea of cowboys has been gathered from the movies. She colors them through eyes of romance. She becomes disappointed when a cowpuncher fails to protect her when he is held up and robbed. Taking things in her own hand she recovers the stolen loot, but is captured while masquerading as highwayman. In the end she believes in the West when cowpuncher rescues her.

The Lady Who Lied

(First National—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is a conventional picture running true to form with its obvious routine plot. The settings and atmosphere are excellent as a background for a triangle story by Robert Hichens, which was originally known as "Snake Bite." The present title has a world of meaning—as well as punch. It will probably lure good patronage to the picture aside from the fact that the author has his readers and Lewis Stone and the other important players have their following.

The story tells nothing new and the way it is developed the plot lacks motivation. The heroine surprises a woman of questionable character in her fiance's apartment and naturally being piqued tells him their engagement is at an end. It is easy to spot the subsequent action. There isn't any suspense because you know what is coming all the time, but Lewis Stone gives his scenes a certain amount of color. He is one actor who makes any story interesting no matter if it lacks substance and movement. Here he plays a sophisticated man of the world—a portrayal which no one else can approach with such easy grace and charm.

The scene shifts from Venice to the African desert until the finish. We find the heroine dashing off to the dark continent where she marries a doctor who was once interested in her. Her erstwhile fiance follows and engages the M. D. and his wife to accompany him on an expedition in the desert. In the subsequent action the hero is bitten by a viper (hence the title of the original story) which gives the doctor the opportunity to declare himself. He will not treat the patient unless the other man's relations with his wife have been entirely on the level. In the end his humanity and the ethics of his profession lead him to cure his rival.

There isn't much drama in this picture—and there are several dull pauses which are covered up with descriptive subtitles. It is only moderately interesting. When Stone has his moments you pay strict attention. Virginia Valli and Nita Naldi are the two women in the case. The latter hasn't very many scenes, but she certainly works fast while on the set.

THEME. Triangle drama of lovers quarrel—the girl rejecting her fiance when surprising him with other woman. She marries a former admirer but is eventually reunited to the hero.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The settings and atmosphere. Scene when heroine surprises fiance with another woman. The vamp incident put over by Nita Naldi. The manly, convincing performance by Lewis Stone. The snake-bite sequence. The work of supporting players.

DIRECTION. Conventional all the way. Might have made it less obvious. Shows restraint in handling the characters. Tacks on an unconvincing ending. Mounts it well.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Author has a large following. Play him up—and exploit original story known as "Snake Bite." Feature Lewis Stone, Edward Earle, Nita Naldi and Virginia Valli. Exploit the title.

DRAWNG POWER. The cast is well known—and Stone has built up a fine popularity. Well exploited it should do business. O. K. for average houses.

SUMMARY. While this is obvious and commonplace in its development it manages to present interesting moments in the sincere and convincing acting by Lewis Stone—and the excellent mounting given the picture. Too many subtitles—and these give away too much of the plot.

THE CAST

Horace Pierpont	Lewis Stone
Fay Kennion	Virginia Valli
Fifi	Nita Naldi
Dr. Allen Mortimer	Edward Earle
Merton	Leo White
Gen. Sir Henry Kennion	Louis Payne
Ahmed	Purnell Pratt
Saad Ben Youssof	Sam Appel
Zetta	Zalla Zarana
Mahmud	George Lewis

By Robert Hichens. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

SYNOPSIS. Girl surprises fiance entertaining another woman and promptly rejects him, declaring the engagement a joke. She dashes off to Africa and meets a former admirer—who is a doctor. The rejected lover follows and encounters the others who have become married. They go on an expedition into the desert—and the hero is bitten by a snake. The doctor cures him. When latter is eliminated lovers are reunited.

The Happy Warrior

(Vitagraph—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WITH the success attendant upon the filming of A. S. M. Hutchinson's stories, "If Winter Comes," and "The Clean Heart," Vitagraph has turned to one of his earlier novels, "The Happy Warrior," and all things considered have made a fair-to-middlin' picture from it. There isn't the same simplicity—or depth of pathos in the author's early venture—and because the film fails to carry these qualities it doesn't contain the excellent humanities which marked the production of his later stories.

J. Stuart Blackton has treated it pretty faithfully. But there are so many characters that getting down to the treatment of the main plot becomes difficult. It is as if a half dozen figures are introduced who are given too much prominence. At least the motivation isn't very clear.

The central idea has the hero "a happy warrior"—a man born to conquer. He is the rightful inheritor of a rich estate, but his father's secret marriage is not accepted by an impostor. The story builds to prove this chap renouncing riches to be faithful to his friend who has innocently usurped his place. There's a lot of colorful incident showing the boy growing to manhood—and his joining a circus in which he becomes a prizefighter. In fact no cause for complaint can be registered against the color of the various scenes. It is well played, too. Malcolm McGregor in the central role plays with fine spirit and conviction, though there are too many close-ups of him. The cast has been well picked with an eye toward true English representation. Mary Alden, Anders Randolf, Alice Calhoun, Otto Mathiesen, Wilfrid North, Olive Borden and Gardner James are thoroughly in character. It's a first rate picture even if the story is somewhat detached—and the figures manipulated too actively.

THEME. Romantic drama of youth who is groomed by his aunt to take his place as a nobleman—the boy having been cheated out of his inheritance. He renounces riches for the sake of a loyal friendship.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The detail and incident. Scene when servant kills his oppressor and his trial in court. The fight between the boys. The circus scenes—the fight and the wrecking of the show. The acting. The conviction in the suggestion of English life.

DIRECTION. Has done a first rate job even if story gets away from him here and there. Certainly adds a lot of color—keeps pretty faithful to novel—and shows some fine treatment in presenting characters.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Here you have the famous author who wrote "If Winter Comes" and "The Clean Heart." These made great pictures. Play up the new picture as typical of the author's style. Play up the cast—and exploit the central idea—that fame and riches count for nothing if you can have lasting friendships.

DRAWING POWER. Good exploitation should help considerably. Suitable for better class houses.

SUMMARY. Presenting a rather detached story and characters who are manipulated around a great deal, thus destroying unity of plot, the picture does not always sustain itself. But it carries charm, sufficient incident and some fine character studies. It is a clean story—carrying humor and sentiment. Not compact enough.

(Metro-Goldwyn—Six Reels)

HERE'S a good attraction for the dog days. The title indicates the great open spaces where snow is snow—and plenty of it. It's a story of a man's courage against tremendous odds—of his titanic fight with the elements. There are fine moments of suspense especially when the assistant engineer takes his life in his hands and battles through the drifts to seek relief for the little camp of fugitives. They had been railroading—building a tunnel, but when the chief engineer tries to push the work too quickly the charges of dynamite wrecked the ledge and released an avalanche.

The plot—as plots go—doesn't amount to much. It's a slight yarn which the director has touched up to gain melodramatic effects. The climax comes early when the hero tells the girl he will try and get through after the others have failed. This expression of courage makes her declare her love for him. What follows is the mushing through the snow, the tapping of wires far out in the white spaces, and the hero helping fire a snow plow on the way back. Meanwhile a few of the boys have become victims of shattered nerves—and a vicious trouble-maker has failed to capture the heroine when she blinds him with a pan of boiling water.

There is good action all the way—action punctuated with stray bits of humor and sentiment—Snitz Edwards taking care of the humor—and a baby looking after the sentiment. The infant is saved in the nick of time when the relief train arrives with the precious milk. The camp had gone without food for three days. But as the snow plow scenes are flashed time and again they get somewhat monotonous—and the suspense here spends itself.

However, there is no doubt of its appeal. The exteriors—the atmosphere—these carry pictorial appeal. The acting is also in competent hands. Pat O'Malley and the others see to that.

THEME. Melodrama of white open spaces showing a man's courage in fighting the elements and bringing relief to an isolated camp which has nearly been exterminated by an avalanche.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The exteriors. The avalanche episodes—and the thrill and suspense in them. The mushing through the snow. The scenes featuring snow plow breaking through the drifts. Scene when heroine foils villain. The heart interest.

DIRECTION. Has certainly touched up story with thrills and atmosphere. Arrives at climax too early—and repetition of following scenes lose some of their suspense. However, he has made a good melodrama.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Certainly make a play on this picture's coolness—it being a melodrama of the great white spaces. Play up the avalanche and the other highlights. Bill as a picture of a man's great fight against the elements, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Certainly should do business in summer months if properly exploited. Play up Pat O'Malley, Robert Frazer and Claire Windsor. Good enough for first runs and other types of houses.

SUMMARY. A good melodrama is offered here. It has a simple plot which can be understood by a child. Affords plenty of action, a fair amount of suspense, moments of heart interest and humor. It also presents a fine pictorial appeal. Climax comes too early which shows weak construction. But it has plenty of power.

SYNOPSIS. Engineer upbraids his chief for pushing tunneling job on a railroad construction. The dynamite blasting has weakened the snow ledges. When a particularly powerful charge has been set off an avalanche nearly destroys the camp. The laborers are isolated and without food. After several attempts to seek relief the engineer breaks through, taps the wires calling for food and supplies—and fires the boiler of the snow plow. The camp is saved. The hero wins the race against death—and also wins the girl.

The Lucky Devil

(Paramount—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WITH Byron Morgan dashing off one of his smart little stories of a chap down in his luck who manages through his colossal nerve—and a fair amount of ingenuity to enter a car in a race and win the stakes and the girl to boot, you can rest assured that the author is keeping the pace pretty well—a pace which was started when he wrote yarns for Wally Reid. Richard Dix is the entry here. His easy way of carrying out the plot of this romantic comedy makes his a good bet for the lighter pieces. It is a rather topsy-turvey story—and you'll have to overlook gags and convenient episodes to enjoy it.

The hero is demonstrating a camping outfit in a department store and luckily wins a sporty racer in a raffle. It is a hoodoo car given up by the owner's son who has had enough trouble with cops and women. But no sooner does the clerk step on the gas than his troubles begin. He is pinched several times, runs out of gas, has a few of the accessories taken in lieu of payment for fuel, is mistaken for the wealthy bounder who owned the car and, therefore is rejected by the girl and her suspicious aunt who believe him a perfect devil, and ends up by running out on his board bill. Yes, and he has to fight a "pug" and take a beating in order to get enough money to enter the race. His object is to aid the girl whose finances have also run very low.

The racing episode is the high spot of the picture and it easily takes up three reels. To keep it from becoming monotonous the director has gagged it with slapstick incident. The rube stuff is injected here and there, but it is too far-fetched to be amusing. The sheriff, a perfect "wheat" with his "spinach," trying to keep an eye on the car, is asked to accompany the driver—and he rides the entire race. The hair-pin curves, the obstacles, the thrills in dashing through mud and escaping death or injury in one form or another keep you fairly on edge. It's acted charmingly by Esther Ralston, and Edna May Oliver's work stands out.

THEME. Romantic comedy of chap who wins a hoodoo car in a raffle and runs into all kinds of trouble before he cops the race and the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The incident in the store and at camp. The troubles which pile up for the hero in evading arrest. The race. The local color and atmosphere. The thrills. The easy acting by star and Esther Ralston.

DIRECTION. Keeps slight plot enlivened through providing a lot of incident. You know how it's going to end, but there are surprises in the assortment of episodes. Stresses comedy hokum too much, but does a good job by story.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tie up with auto dealers or an auto race that might be run off in your locality. Play up Dix in the type of story which made Walley Reid so popular. Bill it as a dashing picture of romance and adventure.

DRAWING POWER. The star should draw them. Playing up stills and billing its high spots should attract them. Certainly suitable for summer business.

SUMMARY. This is a fairly lively picture of a chap who runs into lots of trouble with his racing car. Manages to keep going with its incident and the manner in which hero tries to win girl. Has plenty of thrills and incident, but comedy hokum is not so good. However, it is light and entertaining. Played with dash and charm.

A LIVELY municipal row has arisen in the city of York as a result of the request of theatrical interests there for the right of persons owning canopies and marquees extending over the sidewalks in front of places of public assembly to place electrical advertising signs on them. The permission was sought through the introduction in city counsel of an ordinance granting the desired permission. This immediately resulted in a public controversy that had much airing in the newspapers.

Some persons, who opposed the bill, did so on the ground that the signs would detract from the beauty of the city and be a menace to safety. Among the opponents were members of the City Planning Commission, a body composed of prominent citizens, serving without salary, in an advisory capacity to Council in regard to matters relating to the beautification and expansion of the city.

On July 1, Council passed the ordinance granting the right to place the electric signs. This was followed immediately by the resignation of J. Horace Rudy as a member of the City Planning Commission. He issued a statement in which he hinted that others also will resign from the Planning body.

The question of the right to place the electric signs was raised in connection with the erection of the New Strand Theatre, in York, by the Nathan Appell theatrical interests, who control most of the theatre properties in the city.

Among the Central Pennsylvania picture theatres that have closed during the summer are the Star, Mummelstown; the Iroquois, Palmyra; the Lyric, Shippensburg, and the Auditorium, Branchdale.

Representatives of the Stanley Advertising Company, a subsidiary of the Stanley Company of America, motion picture film producers, of Philadelphia, were given a hearing at the meeting of the Harrisburg City Commissioners, on June 30, at which they made a proposition to take film views of the city for exhibition next year at the Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial Celebration, in the "miniature Hollywood" that the Stanley Company proposes to establish on the exposition grounds. The City Commissioners reserved decision. Similar offers are being made to other cities throughout the state.

Announcement has been made by the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce that only three reservations remain untaken for the annual "cruise" of the Chamber members and for which the entertainment committee is chairmanned by C. Floyd Hopkins, head of the Wilmer & Vincent theatrical enterprises in that city.

Announcement is made by the Nathan Appell Amusement Enterprises, of York, that their new theatre, the Strand, in that city, is about completed and will be ready for formal opening on Monday August 17. There will be a special program in which city officials, officers of the Amusement Enterprises and probably a number of stars will participate.

Cloyd M. Gibble, manager of the Majestic, a vaudeville and motion picture theatre owned by the Wilmer & Vincent company in Harrisburg, is making arrangements for the taking of a motion picture local talent play, in which the star performers will be amateur actors and actresses to be chosen by competition.

After the stars have been chosen a scenario will be prepared, the background for which will be local scenes in and about Harrisburg. When the local film play is completed it will be shown on the Majestic screen.

Post card greetings, mailed in Paris on June 22, have been received in Harrisburg from Peter Magaro, former motion picture exhibitor of the latter city, who went abroad in the party of E. A. Schiller, general manager of the Marcus Loew interests which are establishing Loew theatres on the Continent. Mr. Magaro is former owner of the Regent theatre, Harrisburg, purchased last May by Marcus Loew.

Seattle

TWO changes in the personnel of the Lannon-Sheffield Greater Features Exchanges were announced last week by J. Sheffield of this city. R. L. Ruggles, former exhibitor of Kelso and Chehalis, has joined the sales staff of the former organization and will work in the Western Washington territory. C. P. Loeb, formerly associated with Warner Brothers in the East Washington districts, will remain in that locality for Greater Features. Mr. Sheffield reported E. L. Walton, manager of the Denver Office, and his brother L. N. Walton of Portland, both enjoying their vacations in California, from which they were to return early in July.

L. K. Brin, general manager of Kwality Pictures Exchanges, was expected back at his local office early in July, following an absence of about three weeks, during which time he spent several days in New York City, Chicago and other Eastern centers. Announcements as to the product that Kwality will distribute in the Northwest states were expected to be made public upon Mr. Brin's return. During his absence the exchange has been under the direction of Harry Brin.

Waldo Ives, graduate of the University of Washington School of Journalism in 1924, and recently associated with Manager George P. Endert's Famous Players-Lasky exchange, last week was announced as the new owner of the Empire Theatre in Anacortes. Negotiations between B. B. Vivien, former owner, and Mr. Ives have been carried on for some time, but it is understood that the deal was consummated last week. Mr. Ives is believed to have the distinction of being the youngest owner-manager in the Pacific Northwest.

A. C. Raliegh, advertising and exploitation manager of Fred G. Sliter's local First National exchange, returned last week from Portland, where he spent several days arranging various exploitation and publicity stunts on some of the new First National releases to play Portland theatres during the early part of July.

Proudly carrying his recently-achieved trophy prominently among his favored possessions, Lou Rosenberg, Pacific Northwest Film Golf Champion, left last week for Portland, where he will attempt to settle down to business again and carry on the sale of pictures for Al Rosenberg's De Luxe Feature Film Exchange. It is rumored that Lou has already turned down several offers to appear in educational films showing golf in all its finer points.

Ed. Dolan of the D. and R. Theatre in Aberdeen was a recent visitor on Film Row. Among other out-of-town faces that bookers eagerly tried to corral were Charles Greime of the Ivan L Theatre in Blaine and H C. Moore, of the Moore Theatrical Enterprises in Tacoma and Olympia.

Warm weather struck Seattle with a vengeance last week, swinging the mercury up to 98, a hot weather record for this city. Needless to mention, throngs remained away from the city's downtown district as much as possible, and theatre business suffered very noticeably. Picture houses have trotted out their "Cool as Ice" and similarly-worded signs and advertising signatures, and have been offering warm weather entertainment to those who remain in the city. A fall in temperature has already been predicted and was being looked forward to eagerly by local managers.

Quick action by the Seattle Fire Department one day last week averted what might have been serious damage on Film Row. A blaze broke out in the basement of the Moore Hotel, directly across a fifteen-foot alley from the F. B. O., Warner and United Artists exchanges, but speedy firefighting kept the flames from crossing the alley and creating serious consequences.

Albany

NORTHERN New York exhibitors will have an opportunity of welcoming one of the old-timers as Lester Wolf, who was connected ith the Universal exchange here back in 1913, has returned to town from Rochester, and will henceforth handle the Metro-Goldwyn product to the north of here.

The theatre in Bolton Landing will not operate this summer as will also be the case with the one at Long Lake. The theatre in Lake George, however, which is run by Mrs. Carpenter, assisted by her son-in-law during the summer, opened up full-blast during the week as the well known resort began to fill with summer people. M. B. Riddell, who has the Gem in Luzerne, another resort town, is taking his vacation in the west.

Wedding bells rang for Ernest Tetrault, owner of the Grand theatre in Watervliet, one day last week. Mr. Tetrault has a host of friends along Film Row who extend their congratulations through the columns of the News.

Louis Schine, of Gloversville, who with his brother has some sixty-odd theatres in New York state, has returned from Atlantic City, where he spent his vacation, remaining over the Fourth. It is said that it is the first vacation Mr. Schine has indulged in, in many years.

When Ted Hayes, a salesman in the First National exchange, went over to his car in Kingston the other day, he found it adorned with a ticket. Of course Mr. Hayes showed up in court and after explaining things managed to get off without paying a fine by assuring the judge that he would never, never violate another law, at least in Kingston.

Julius Singer, who was manager of the Universal exchange in Albany for several months, and who is now located in New York city, dropped in at the local exchange last week, and at the same time called on his many friends along Film Row. Things look good for the Albany office in connection with a sales contest as the local exchange now heads Group C.

Lilyan Tashman, playing in "Madame Lucy" for Producers Dist. Corp.

Alphonse LeMay, projectionist at the Lincoln, in Troy, has just purchased a new automobile with the screening money he has accumulated during the past season. It is said that the exchange men wish him good luck.

Don't ever attempt to out-run Edward Hochstim, film salesman for Pathe out of this city. That holds for both exhibitors and salesmen and exchange managers. When Mr. Hochstim was a star on his high school team, he covered the 100 yards in 10 flat and can do almost as good these days.

Leave it to William Smalley, of Cooperstown to see that his attractions are well advertised in his fifteen or sixteen theatres. Bearing in mind that people travel long distances these days in automobiles, with a slight excuse, he advertises in the Oneonta papers his theatres in Cooperstown, Sidney, Stamford and Worcester, as well as his dancing pavilion in Cooperstown.

A son of Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand houses in Troy and Albany, submitted to an operation at one of the Albany hospitals during the past week. The operation was a success and the boy is now on the road to recovery.

Samuel Moroze, of Albany, has acquired the Delaware theatre from Abe Stone, and will assume possession on September 15 when Mr. Stone's lease expires. Mr. Stone, who bought a new home in Albany during the past week, will continue to run the Arbor Hill theatre.

Walter Suckno, a peer among the exploitation exhibitors of Albany, and who has put the Albany theatre on the map during the last few months, has been named to look after the exploitation in connection with the Greater Movie Season in the Albany Zone.

Harry Lazarus, of the Auditorium in Kingston, was a caller in Albany last Friday on his way to the Massachusetts line, on a trout fishing expedition. Mrs. Lazarus accompanied him. In commenting upon the situation in Kingston, Mr. Lazarus said that while business naturally slumped during the hot spell, that it came back last week strong. Mr. Lazarus will erect a new theatre in Kingston this year.

Harold Hahn, who has been connected with the local Fox exchange for some time past, and who was transferred last week to Denver, was tendered a party by several of his friends among the exhibitors and exchanges last Saturday evening. Charles Walder, the new local manager for Fox, was in New York city during the past week. W. J. Mahoney, formerly of Buffalo, is now connected with the Fox exchange here, and covering the southern tier.

Joseph A. Hanley, a traveling auditor for First National out of New York, was in town during the week. Miss Renee Craven, who is connected with the local First National exchange, is spending a portion of her vacation in Toronto.

Julian Eltinge, playing in "Madame Lucy," a Producers Dist. Corp. release.

The past week brought to town both Julius Byck, a deaf mute with houses in Tannersville and Hunter, and Barnet Levy, who handles Mr. Byck's theatre in Hunter. Mr. Byck sported a tie that could be heard at least a block. He is always a welcome figure along Film Row, and while a close buyer nevertheless does a good business and is always on the lookout for pictures that draw. His houses at both Hunter and Tannersville are named "The Rudolf," after his father. Business has picked up generally throughout the entire Catskill region and during the past week a pianist as well as a violinist have been added to the Tannersville house.

The Rialto, in Monticello, run by Fred H. Starck, has become one of the best moneymaking theatres in the Catskill mountain region. When Mr. Starck took over the Rialto, which incidentally is one of the prettiest theatres in that part of the state, the house was generally regarded as a white elephant. With plenty of exploitation and through the showing of good pictures, Mr. Starck has now built up a business that is the envy of other exhibitors.

The Gateway theatre in Little Falls, which was recently acquired by the Schine brothers, has been closed for the summer, during which time alterations and repairs will take place. It will reopen in the early fall.

The Star in Newburgh, seeking to overcome the regular Monday slump that so often prevails, has hit upon the plan of offering "Bargain Mondays" to the residents of that city. Admission runs from 10 to 20 cents.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts, of the Troy theatre, returned last Saturday from a very pleasant two weeks' vacation in New York city. While the weather was rather cool for Mrs. Roberts to enjoy the bathing at the beaches, it didn't prevent Mr. Roberts from spending his time at the Polo Grounds. Mr. Roberts' vacations are much the same year after year for to him the height of pleasure is a seat in the grandstand with New York at bat.

The dance contests which Jake Golden has been running at the Griswold theatre in Troy, have come to a close, the finals taking place last Monday night, when ten dancers competed for first honors. The theatre was packed to its doors. The results of the screen tests that were taken on June 25 at the theatre are being shown this week and attracting capacity crowds.

Benjamin M. Berinstein has been appointed supervising manager of all of the Berinstein houses in Elmira. George Roberts, of Albany, who has been connected with the Berinstein company for several years, will continue in the capacity of general manager of the circuit.

Between running the theatre in Liberty and selling insurance, Jack Beck is doing very well these days, thank you. Over at Walden, C. R. Didsbury, who runs the theatre there, is doing equally as well, being very popular with the Community and despite the size of the place, finding sufficient patronage to keep the theatre operating six days a week.

Edward Hochstim spent last Sunday in Hudson, but never loafed for so much as a minute, as he took his brother's place at the Star, handling the house like an old timer, while Sam took a day off.

It was a proud day for Jacob Rosenthal, owner of the Rose theatre in Troy, when his son received his diploma last week, at the commencement of the Troy High School. The boy has made a name for himself both in the classroom and in athletic circles. Mr. Rosenthal plans to send the boy to college and if the Rose continues to do as well as it has in the past, the younger Mr. Rosenthal will never have to worry about the room rent.

It was a tough day for Tony Veiller last week when he left Albany in his automobile bound for Troy, where he handles the Lincoln theatre. Without taking the trouble to find out whether he had sufficient gasoline to cover the distance, Mr. Veiller started out but came to a sudden halt midway between the two cities and a half mile or so from the nearest gasoline station. After walking back and securing enough gas to carry him three or four miles, Mr. Veiller pulled up at the next station only to be told by the man in charge that he had a flat tire. Just as Mr. Veiller started to change tires, it began to rain. From now on, Mr. Veiller declares that he will pin no faith to the old adage that every cloud has a silver lining.

F. Reynard, who is associated with Judge Foster in owning and operating a string of motion picture theatres in Marion, paid the local exchanges a visit in person last week, and reports business good for this time of the year.

George Moore separated himself from his theatres in Bellevue and Bucyrus long enough to call on his exchange friends and swop hard luck stories.

George Sharp, former owner of the Southern theatre, Cleveland, has been heard from. He's in Miami, buying and selling land. And doing it advantageously, according to a letter just received by Paul Gusdanovic.

W. M. Hatch has purchased the Opera House at Prospect, Ohio.

Bill Mendelssoh, who has been in charge of Paramount publicity in this territory for the past year, is going to Philadelphia to handle Paramount publicity out of that office. His successor for the Cleveland office has not been announced.

Kelly, Massilon; Fred Kenny, Delta, Ohio; William Tallman, East Liverpool, and William Mendelssohn, Mark Cummins, M. A. Malane, Milton Korach and J. E. Fontaine of Cleveland. Milwaukee

A. SCHMITZ, formerly with the Ludwig Film Exchange, has joined the sales force of F. B. O. and is now traveling Southern Wisconsin in that capacity. His many friends among the exhibitors in the territory wish him success in his new line.

Frank Trottman, manager of the Gem Theatre, has returned to Milwaukee after a successful fishing trip into the Northern Wisconsin and Upper Michigan lake regions. Frank claims to have landed a 22 pound muskie as the prize catch of his trip, and while he failed to bring back the evidence, the boys who have seen former proof of his prowess don't for a moment doubt his word.

The Milwaukee office of F. B. O. has been buzzing with activity during the past week. M. J. Wesifeldt, district manager, spent several days here in closing several choice contracts in cooperation with S. H. Abrams, Milwaukee manager. Art Roberts, assistant manager at Milwaukee, made a flying trip through the territory and came back well rewarded with nice new contracts.

Johnny Arthur, featured in six new Tuxedo Comedies for Educational.

Reservations have been made by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises to have the Wisconsin Theatre represented in the aeroplane race to be sponsored by The Wisconsin News during the latter part of July. Ten planes representing local advertisers are to be entered in the race which will be around the territory contiguous to Milwaukee. Excellent publicity will be gained by all firms listed among the entrees, while the winner will be a veritable publicity gold-mine for its backer.

Sam Stoll, formerly representing Universal out of Kansas City, and Carl Ebert, who formerly traveled this state for First National, have joined the sales force of Metro-Goldwyn at Milwaukee. Considerable improvement in the appearance of the Metro-Goldwyn offices here has been achieved by repainting and redecorating the walls, and by rearranging the layout of desks and furniture for greater space economy and efficiency.

Henry Goldman, operator of the Colonial and Grand Theatres at Green Bay, has left for Washington, D. C., where he will mingle business with pleasure for a while.

"Cool and inviting" very aptly describes the appearance of the Strand Theatre lobby since the recent installation of summer furniture, ferneries, and a coat of fresh paint on lamp stands and the like. Clearly visible from the street, the atmosphere of the lobby makes it hard to walk the hot pavements without dropping in for a few hours comfort.

O. L. Meister, manager of the White House Theatre, again played the royal host to local film men and exhibitors, when he staged another of his famous picnics at his private country grounds. Plenty of lunch and beverages after a hotly contested baseball game, was followed by a dip in the Meister swimmin' hole. Nobody knows who won the ball game, the principal difficulty having been in deciding who was on which side and why.

The Montreal staff of Regal Films gave him a player piano as a wedding gift while the United Amusements, Limited, operating a chain of high class theatres in Montreal, presented him with a huge chest of table cutlery and silverware. Other gifts were as substantial. Mr. and Mrs. Davis proceeded to the Maine Coast for their honeymoon and will also travel around by New York City before returning to Montreal.

Harold Vance, a well-known exhibitor of Montreal and Ottawa, has assumed the personal management of the Majestic Theatre, Ottawa, under the direction of the owners, Froman and Petegorsky. Petawawa, Ontario, a big military camp town of war days, lost its large moving picture theatre on July 3 when the frame structure, which seated 2,000 persons, was totally destroyed by fire. The building had been built during war days for the entertainment of the troops in training at Petawawa and was completely fitted for the presentation of moving pictures.

J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, played host to upwards of 100 farm boys who had been collected from various farms in the Ottawa Valley for a visit to the city under the auspices of the Rotary Club of Ottawa, of which Mr. Franklin is an active member. These boys had been brought over from England under a country settlement plan and a part of the programme consisted of providing periodic treats for the lads. Mr. Franklin gave them a treat on June 30 by having them as his guests at the Keith house.

Mr. Gorman who is now leading a semi-active life, was showered with good wishes and tokens of esteem from all parts of the Dominion, thus showing the favor in which he is held by a legion of friends. Pete was born in London, England, and made his first stage appearance in Ottawa in 1876, later becoming a dancing star. For 18 years he was identified with the late Ambrose J. Small of Toronto, being manager of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, for Mr. Small. Mr. Gorman is also well known as a Canadian horseman, owning a string of race horses.

A large and representative gathering of theatre and film exchange men met on the stage of the Capitol theatre on Saturday night, for the purpose of offering congratulations to K. M. Leach, who was recently presented by Mrs. Leach with a baby daughter. AND now the movies have invaded the Washington Country Club links, the principal frontier of outdoor sports.

The invasion took place on July Fourth in the form of a Colonial Theatre Handicap, in which the principal trophy was a loving cup offered by George Rea, purveyor of screen fare and ardent bunker-climber. The Colonial Theatre Handicap was a one fight affair, the cup to be awarded for all time to the golfer turning in the lowest net score.

An added novelty had also been prepared by Mr. Rea, in conjunction with Bill Danziger, representative of Paramount Pictures, who has been a local visitor. Scores of the three lowest men in the Colonial Theatre Handicap are to be forwarded to Hollywood to Gloria Swanson, Pola Negri and Bebe Daniels. Each of these Paramount luminaries, who are link devotees, will be asked to try and beat the scores of these local men and to forward their autographed scores, together with their photographs.

"Miss Swanson," according to Rea and Danziger, "is the best woman golfer among the Hollywood film folks, excelling principally in long driving off the tea." It will be interesting to compare scores of the best local talent among the men and those of the beautiful screen stars.

Jake Rappaport of the Lovejoy, a popular Buffalo East Side community house, says he remembers way back when it used to be a tough job to get 'em out of the theatre while now it's a harder job to get 'em in. Jake operated a theatre when they came in at a nickel a throw and brought their lunch and bedding with them and when, having seen the same picture all afternoon and evening—asked him if that was all.

New Color Effects for Stage Presentation

Eastman Theatre and Kodak Co. Develop Method Giving Remarkable Results That Are Easily Obtainable

By Thomas F. Murray, Jr.

TO satisfy the desire for color in the motion picture theatre the public looks, and does not look in vain, to the man who in the first place made motion pictures possible, to George Eastman, and through him to the personnel and facilities of the Research Laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company and the Eastman Theatre. It was through the cooperation and combined effort of the men of these two organizations that the color lighting effects to be described, were perfected, and it is worthy of note, in passing, that the color effects thus obtained are easily produced, have a large sphere of applicability, and are decidedly pleasing to the spectators.

Let us go up into the projection room of the Eastman Theatre and learn how these color effects are produced. When new effects are being tried out, which is every week, we will find Lewis M. Townsend, projection engineer for the Eastman interests in Rochester taking direct charge. It was Mr. Townsend, in collaboration with Lloyd A. Jones, head of the physics department of the Research Laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company, who devised and developed this type of color lighting, greatly assisted in the work by William Hennessy of the Eastman Theatre staff whose agile brush and clever mind are responsible for the designs used.

The equipment for producing these color effects at the Eastman Theatre consists of four flood lights, to each of which has been added an eight inch plano-convex lens and an optical bed, or rigid metal support, on which is mounted an objective lens, additional iris diaphragms, and a rack of slots for holding masks, designs, and color filters.

Lloyd A. Jones, head of Physics department of the Eastman Research Laboratories and Lewis M. Townsend, projection engineer for the Eastman Theatre and other Eastman interests in Rochester. It was Mr. Jones in collaboration with Mr. Townsend who devised and developed the type of colored lighting described in the accompanying article.

There is also in the added equipment a place for mounting a color wheel. The optical bed and additional lens equipment changes the flood light into a mammoth stereopticon. The equipment includes also a double dissolving stereopticon, with its two color wheels, and slide holders arranged so that one or both plates carrying the designs may be rotated in the same direction or in opposite directions.

The color filters used are made by mounting appropriate sized sheets of colored gelatin in the metal slides supplied by the manufacturers of the flood lights for this purpose. The masks or slides used are of metal cut to fit the slits in the rack on the optical bed. Each mask has an opening in its center of such a size and shape that the light passing through illuminates the stage or the stage and the orchestra pit, but no other part of the house. The designs, depending on the original drawing and the results desired, are either photographed in the regular way and printed on five by seven inch sheets of cine positive film on acetate base, or are photographed directly on cine positive film on acetate base. That the design used in the stereopticons should be on cellulose acetate base is important, because the heat of the arc will crack glass plates and ignite nitro cellulose or celluloid base.

The method for producing what Loyd A. Jones calls "statie" color introductions may be divided into four general classifications. (A) Those in which no design is used. (B) Those in which one drawn design is used, with or without a supplementary photograph. (C) Those in which two drawn designs are used. (D) Those in which two photographs are used.

In the first of these methods pleasing color effects are obtained by combining on the curtain the colors produced by allowing the light to pass through appropriate filters using only a plain mask in each stereopticon to confine the light to the stage, or to the stage and orchestra pit. In this way very delightful effects have been obtained by using two different shades of red. At another time red was used with the iris half closed and a full flood of blue. Again the combination was one shade of blue irised off 1-4; red irised off 1-2; and a second shade of blue full flood. By choice of the iris diaphragms and a judicious use of the size of the opening on each, various types of color effects are to be had. The partial irising down of some of the colors take these colors out of the region of the screen corresponding to the amount the iris is closed. By using a diaphragm that is in focus, the colors are cut sharply and distinct bands of color are produced, giving an effect similar to that of the rainbow. If, on the other hand, a diaphragm is used that is not in focus, the colors blend and there is an easy color transition across the whole curtain.

By far the largest number of static color effects used at the Eastman Theatre so far have been produced by the method designated (B). In general, in this class, an attempt is made to link the color scheme and the design with a prominent feature or personage in the picture to follow. As an example of such an instance might be sighted the use of the drawing of the old time boat as an introduction to the picture, "The Sea Hawk". In this case the drawing, (Fig. 1) was photographed in the usual way on standard film and a print was made on cine positive film on acetate base. This was mounted on a metal support and projected through a filter giving a background of blended colors on which floated a black ship. The curtain was then flooded with light from another stereopticon using a violet-blue filter so selected that it gave color to the vessel without destroying its contrast with the background. The blended color filter used with the figure of the boat was made at the Eastman Theatre by mounting strips of colored gelatin in a filter slide. The colors ranged from blue over the surface of the water, through violet-blue and violet and on into rose for the reflection from the rising sun. In order that the colors would blend gracefully, the filter was placed in a special holder close to the objective lens.

In the photoplay, "A Thief in Paradise", the dance representing the tragedy of the pearl fisher furnished the motif for the introduction. Here a conventional drawing of a huge shell (Fig. 2A) was used with a red filter. From another lamp Figure 2B was projected through a flesh colored filter showing Aileen Pringle in the dance. This photograph was reduced and blocked out so that it fit conveniently into the shell. A similar idea was employed in connection with the showing of, "He Who Gets Slapped". In this instance Figure 3A was used with a green filter and a photgoraph of Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer (Fig. 3B) was projected through a flesh colored filter, while a blue flood played over the whole stage. With "The Golden Bed", the drawing of the peacocks (Fig. 4) was projected through a green filter while the curtain was flooded with magenta. During Easter week, as an introduction to the news reel, there was used a drawing of calla lilies (Fig. 5). The negative was used in this instance and it was hand colored; therefore, no filter was used with it, but from another source a soft green flooded the stage.

The instances illustrated were some of the more pretentious efforts in this class and they serve to show that a real effort is being made, where possible, to use a color introduction that is in keeping with the season, or with the spirit of the production. There are, of course, several less ambitious designs, which have their place and which give surprisingly delightful effects. Some of these consist of dense areas in the form of rectangles, discs, hearts, shamrocks and the like having bands of lesser and lesser density following the original contour, or there might be alternate clear and dense areas. Such designs are usually used in connection with a picture of the actor or actress taking the leading part. One instance of this was the use of a circle "gradation film", as this type of design has come to be called at the Eastman, using a red filter, a picture of "Farina" through a yellow filter, and a flood through a blue filter. As you suspect, the introduction was to an "Our Gang" comedy.

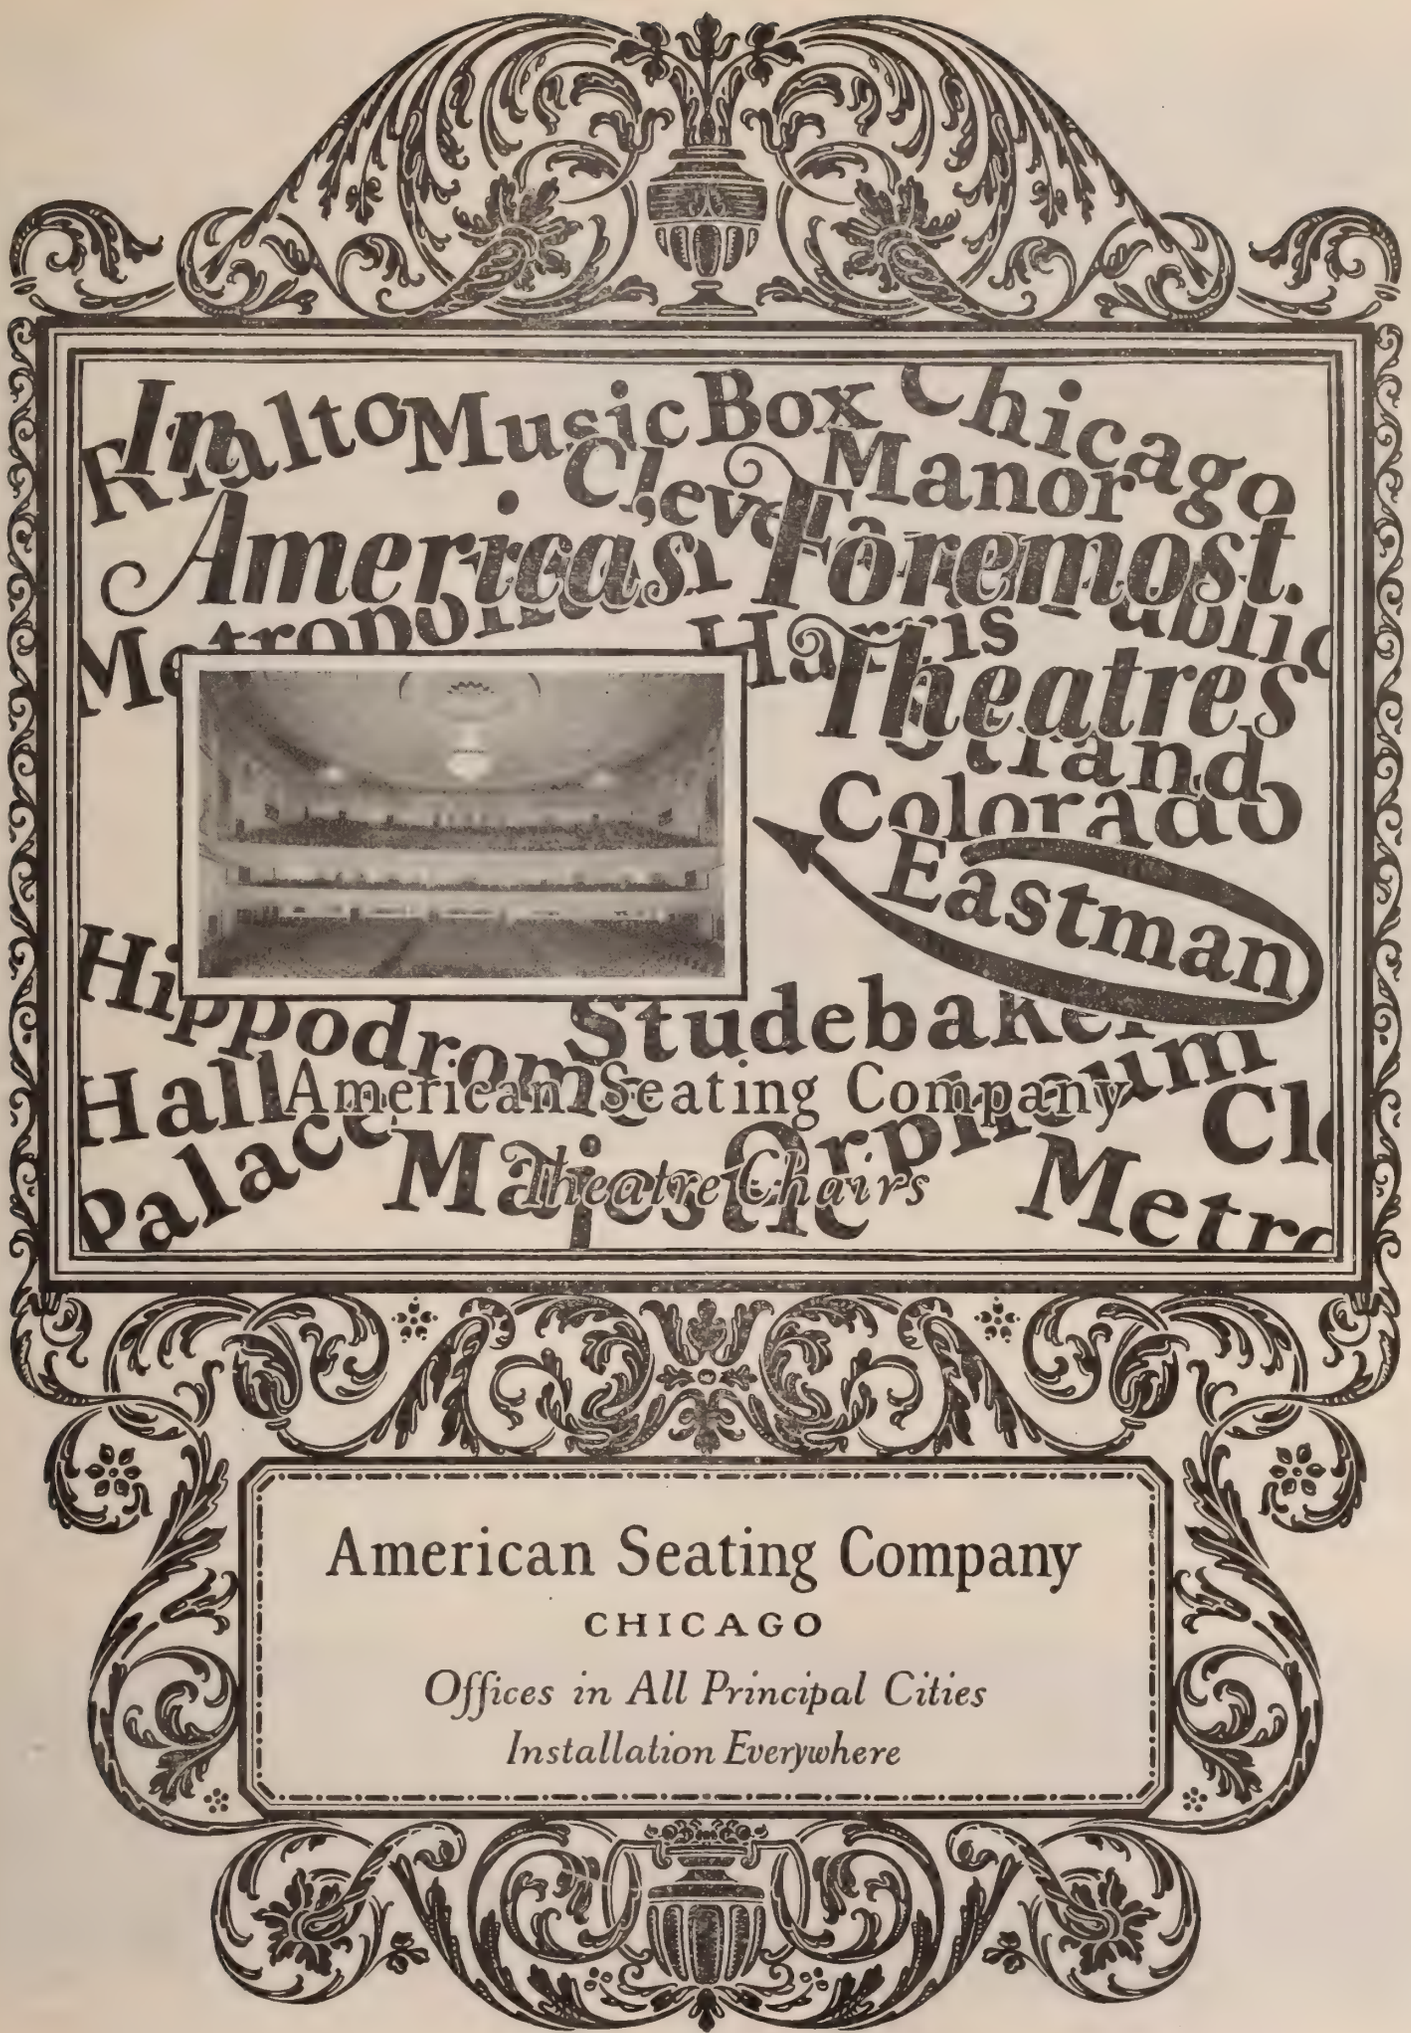
The method designated as (C) does not differ greatly from (B), but with it and the judicious use of the iris diaphragm some very interesting results can be obtained. In one instance the curtain was flooded with violet-blue and the design of the cattails and butterflies (Fig. 6A) was slowly irised on through a green filter. When this diaphragm was completely open, the diaphragm on the third machine, in which was the design of the butterflies alone (Fig. 6B) and an orange filter, was slowly opened. This caused the orange butterflies to appear one by one over the cattails. The designs are then slowly irised off in the reverse order. In this case, as with the calla lilies, negatives of the drawings are made on acetate base film, and these negatives are used in the stereopticons.



Method (D) is used to reproduce in colors, designs which are in colors in the original. This method requires a little more technique in its production, but the results justify the extra effort. Nearly any design in colors may be used as the basis of this work, but it is advisable to select something whose colors are bright and contrasty and whose design is comparatively free from detail. A few suggestions might include pebbled paper such as is sometimes used for catalogue covers, wall paper, cloth having flower designs, or the border of a Navajo blanket. Figure 7 (348) shows a simple design that gave a very artistic effect. The little "shamrocks" or "propellers" were colored red, green, yellow, purple, orange, and blue.

The design selected is photographed on two panchromatic plates, one photograph being made through a cine red filter and one through a cine green filter. Prints of each of these negatives are made on cine positive film coated on celulose acetate base and the positives are mounted on metal slides. The two designs are then thrown onto the curtain in register with each other through filters similar to those used in photographing the original. When pleasing effects are desired in colors other than those of the original design, different filters from the red

The striking front of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., latest theatre, Long Beach, Cal., is an example of the individuality that is being developed in theatre architecture. This house has a seating capacity of 2,300.

Evolution of Daffin Theatre, Tallahassee Fla., Since Origin in 1912

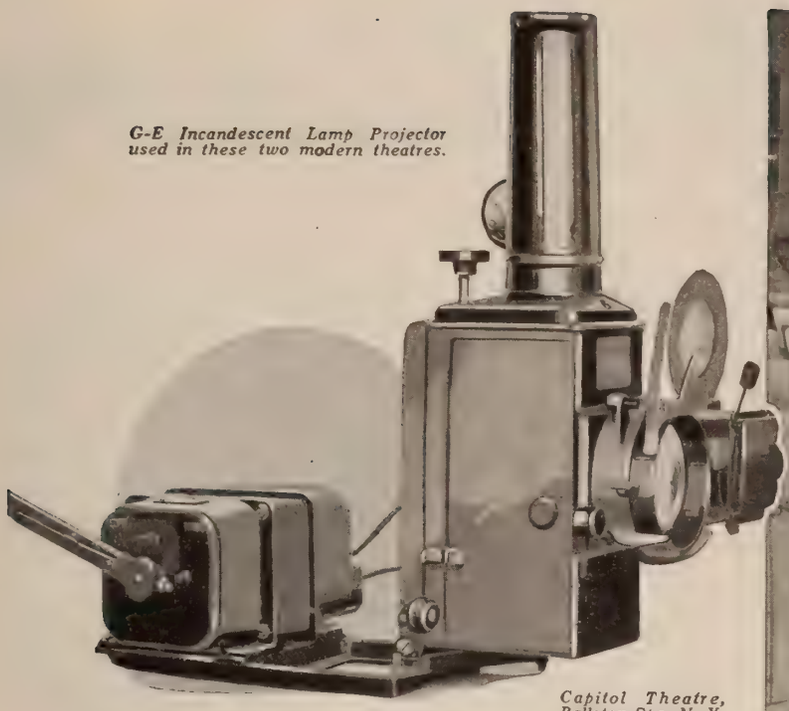
ALTHOUGH the paint is hardly dry on his new and modern-to-the-minute motion picture theatre, Charles E. Daffin, of Tallahassee, Florida, already has purchased one of the best corners on Monroe street and College avenue, near his present location, plans have been drawn and steel is on the ground ready for even greater expansion. His new location is on one of the most ideally situated corners of the city where the new building will be erected when the time arrives that larger quarters will be required.

Mr. Daffin began his career in the moving picture field at Marianna, Fla., his home town, 17 years ago. Adopting at the beginning the slogan of service to his patrons, his success has been little short of phenomenal, not only in his home town, but in the larger field he sought at the state Capital. Here he established himself in the year of 1912 in his present location, the quarters of which have been modernized to meet changing conditions.

His progressive policies of giving his patrons the best pictures available increased his business to such an extent that he soon found it necessary to enlarge the seating capacity of the theatre. The growth of his show house may be seen in the accompanying pictures.

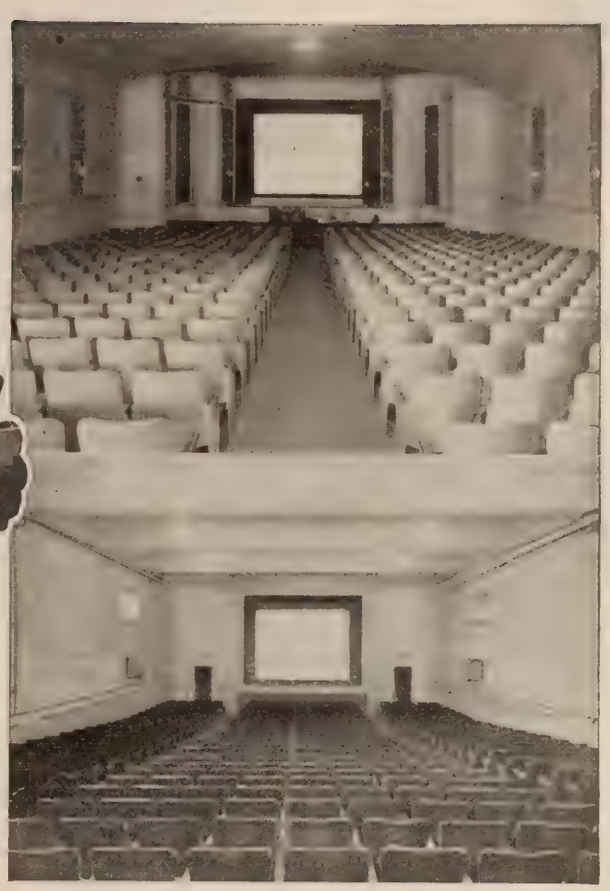
The first picture on the left of the illustration shown on this page is the Daffin Theatre in 1912; the house in the center shows the remodeled Daffin, in which Otis Skinner's screen version of "Kismet" played in 1921. The four young ladies, in front, in Turkish harem garb, served as ushers on that occasion. The right view is the Daffin Theatre as it is today, following extensive improvements that have just been completed. The 1925 model is generally conceded by patrons of motion picture houses to be the equal of those in much larger cities, and such as few places the size of Tallahassee can boast.

Not only does Mr. Daffin own the improved building but he has it equipped with apparatus of the most modern type, including a ventilating system. The building is lighted with four flood lights. The stage is ample for any road attraction. It can be easily seen from any part of the auditorium and is fitted with velvet draperies, with French windows on each side, baskets of flowers. Music for the show is furnished by an organ.



Of Spanish architecture, the Daffin Theatre presents an appearance that adds beauty to its surroundings. It is finished in twelve-color chip-glass as the dash where pebble is commonly used. The structure is three stories high above ground with basement for dressing rooms. The upper floors, after providing commodious space for balcony purposes, leaves room for two apartments. Entrance to the theatre is denoted by an electric flash advertising sign of 350 lights, hung above the marquee, which also has 32 lights with an encircling flex-lume sign.

The theatre is located in the heart of the business district of Tallahassee, where ground is at the highest value. On the West side of the entrance are located the administrative offices of the theatre.



During his residence in Tallahassee and throughout his entire career in the motion picture exhibiting business Mr. Daffin has formed valuable contracts in his state and made friends for the industry by his own splendid example as a worthy factor in community life.

Evolution of the Daffin theatre, Tellahassee, Fla. The picture on the left shows the first Daffin theatre in 1912; in the center is the remodelled house in which Otis Skinner's screen version of "Kismet" played in 1921; the right view is the newly opened Daffin which it is claimed vies with the better theatres in larger centers.

Low First Cost—Low Operating Expense with Incandescent Projection

G-E Incandescent Lamp Projectors have increased profits for many exhibitors who have kept abreast of modern developments in motion picture equipment.

Recent improvements have broadened the field for incandescent projection—perhaps your theatre could now use this method and secure material savings in overhead and operating expense.

G-E engineers, experienced in the application of both arc and incandescent systems, will be glad to give unprejudiced advice to theatre owners. Apply to the nearest G-E office.

The development of the MAZDA lamp for motion picture projection has not only saved money for exhibitors but has greatly improved working conditions for the projectionist and enabled him to secure better screen results. There are no fumes, dust or excessive heat from a MAZDA lamp and operation is simplified, no adjustments being necessary after the machine is started.

Inquiries and Comments

THE New York office of First National Pictures, Inc., informs us that the English Company of that name with offices in Oxford Street, London, has apparently solved the difficulty of non-standardized projector spindles in the United Kingdom, by the simple expedient of using a reel with a hub which will fit the spindles of the various projectors.

In order to appreciate the difficulty which exists along these lines it should be mentioned that no fewer than ten makes of projectors, using three sizes of spindles, are in use in England. They are as follows:

13/32″ spindle	Erneman, Kalee, Kamm, Omnia, Powers, Pathe Motiograph, Ross.
1/2″ spindle	Gaumont.
5/16″ spindle	Simplex.

This difference in spindle size had been the main obstacle to the adoption of the method universally employed in the United States of sending out film on reels or "spools," as the English call them.

Inter-Changeable Reel

At a recent First National Convention, the advent of a patented inter-changeable reel was announced and the statement was made that this company would adopt the invention with a view toward solving the problem of shipping film on reels which could be used on all projectors.

A large order for Hog Patented Spools, as these reels are called, was placed with the intentions of putting them into use as soon as possible.

Before the adoption of this reel, however, it was decided to test the practicability of Mr. Hogg's invention prior to actually placing the reels in service in the field. For eight months a number of sample reels have been in continuous service, and First National are more than satisfied that the mechanism is not only sound, but what is more important, that the purpose of the Hogg reel which is to prolong the life of a copy and insure better service of good-condition prints to the exhibitor is fully accomplished.

The advantages which the Hogg reel offers, it is claimed, to both renters and exhibitors is obvious. The shipping of film on reels which is made possible by the inter-changeable core means protection and support of the reels in transit cases, the scrapping of individual film containers, minimum re-winding and handling, prevention against scratching caused by pulling and loosening the coils of the reel, protection of sprocket holes against the damaging effect of thumping to get the reels level and so on.

There is no doubt that an enormous amount of damage to film which reflects both on the exchange and of course, on the exhibitor, is caused either through tightening up reels or through thumping them to get them level, in one case bad scratching of ends being caused, and in the other serious injury to the sprocket holes.

It should be noted that owing to the elimination of film tins, and owing to the fact that the Hogg mechanical spool is only an ounce or two heavier than the ordinary spool that the additional carriage is negligible. An instruction sheet to projectionists shows the simplicity of the mechanism and the ease with which it may be adjusted to suit any projector.

How It Works

The Hogg Spool, as this interchangeable reel is called, is shown in Fig 1. It is used as follows:

The dimension marked against the hole in which the locking pin (A) is engaged, represents the size of spindle bearing (B) which is in position. This may be either 5/16″, 13/32″ or ½″ according to which make of projector is used.

To bring any desired spindle bearing into position insert any sharp pointed instrument into the counter sunk end of locking pin (A), depress and wedge it sideways under flange towards the locking pin hole marked with the size of spindle bearing (B) desired. Then insert the pointed instrument into spindle bearing (B) and rotate in the same direction until locking pin (A) reaches hole and engages with a sharp "click." The "spool" is now ready for use.

To Promote Its Use

It is the intention to induce each exhibitor to purchase one spare Hogg spool for each of their projectors. Although this is not essential, this small expenditure will avoid re-winding the last reel off the local reel on to the Hogg spool following the last performance. The possession of the spare reel will enable the last part of the copy to be taken straight from the lower magazine and placed in transit cases for despatch without delay, the first reel having been picked up in the lower magazine by the spare spool.

There is also the hope that other exchanges will adopt the idea as a money saving adjunct to their service, and with a view to eliminating the poor condition of prints which is fairly general throughout the trade.

They wish to point out, however, that the Hogg spool is in no wise exclusive to First National, nor are they deriving from those ordered by other exchanges any financial benefit. The only person benefiting financially, who is connected with the firm, being Mr. Hogg, the inventor to whom a small royalty will accrue.

One feels it incumbent to express satisfaction on the adoption of an invention which can but prove for the general good of the print service in this country. There is no doubt that the Hogg device should prove vastly helpful, and the value of it has already been proved by the eight months' trial which has taken place.

Australia Equipment Dealer in New York on Trip Around World

JOHN HARRINGTON who with his wife and son left their home in Australia last March, arriving in California sixteen days later, finally reached New York several weeks ago and will leave in a few days for England on a world tour which they believe will bring them home about Christmas of this year.

Mr. Harrington is founder and managing director of the firm of Harringtons, Ltd., Australia and New Zealand. The company carries on a very extensive business in both wholesaling and retailing in every state of the Commonwealth of Australia and the Dominion of New Zealand, and, it is claimed, is the largest motion picture theatre supply house in that part of the world, and is distributor of Power's Projectors.

Harringtons, Ltd., has large and up-to-date warehouses in Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide, Katoomba, Auckland, N. Z., and Wellington, N. Z. The company has been building up a dealer clientele for 36 years.

It is 18 years since Mr. Harrington last visited this country and, of course, noticed marked changes and improvements when visiting the leading movie studios in California. He was greatly impressed with the splendid advances made in equipment, methods and acting.

Mr. Harrington states that motion pictures are becoming more and more popular in Australia and New Zealand. In fact it is now the usual thing for many families to attend the movies at least two or three times a week and this may offer an example to the motion picture industry in this country.

Mr. Harrington speaks very favorably of American motion picture projectors and says that they have a wonderful reputation in Australia and New Zealand for wearing qualities. Although higher in price than foreign makes they are popular among those who want the best. Mr. Harrington makes the interesting note in connection with this statement that the Commonwealth Film Censors have used the same two Power's 6B projectors for many years and every film which has entered the great Australian continent from the United States has passed through those two projectors.

Photograph taken on the roof of the Power's plant during the recent visit of John Harrington, Australian equipment dealer. Reading from right to left shows A. R. Schulze and A. E. Meyer, of the Nicholas Power Co.; J. E. Harrington, son of John Harrington; H. Griffin, Nicholas Power Co.; John Harrington, founder and managing director of Harringtons, Ltd., Australia and New Zealand; and P. A. McGuire, Nicholas Power Co.

Film Standardizer to Help Make Better Pictures

Selection of movie films, camera plates, and printing papers suitable to the work in hand is to be aided by an instrument for the testing and standardizing of light sensitive emulsions developed by Raymond Davis, Chief of the Photographic Laboratory of the Bureau of Standards, of the Commerce Department, and known as a sensitometer.

The emulsions with which plates, films, and papers are coated vary considerably in speed and contrast, and in sensitiveness to light of different colors. All of these properties affect the use to which the product can be put. A fast plate or film is needed for recording swiftly moving objects, a contrasty plate for use on cloudy days, a soft place in brilliant sunshine. Brilliantly colored objects are rendered best by a plate and color filter combination giving the same color sensitiveness as the eye, while in photographing distant mountains or making airplane maps a greater sensitiveness to red is needed.

The Davis sensitometer will permit the exact measurement of all these factors, and the setting up of standards for them. It is, in effect, an instrument for giving a precisely known set of exposures to a strip of the emulsion, and for making these exposures with a light of known intensity and color. The darkness of the exposed strips is measured by means of a photometer to obtain values for plotting curves of the densities.

A large disc having a multiple of different apertures cut in it forms the shutter which gives the graduated exposure. The opening is so shaped as to give a series of exposures varying by a constant ratio and forming on the plate a row of small rectangles, each a little darker than the one preceding it. The disc must be driven at constant sped, and for this purpose an electric motor is provided, having ingenious devices to make it run at constant speed and to keep it in step with a clock. There is an electric shutter, also, which is set to remain open during one revolution of the disc.

An electric light of carefully measured candlepower is used, togegether with a special light filter.

Small Modern Theatre for White Plains, N. Y.

Harold E. Padden, Herald Building, 35th St. & Broadway, New York, has completed plans for the erection of a $30,000 motion picture theatre and stores to be erected at White Plains Road, White Plains, N. Y., on a plot 50x125.

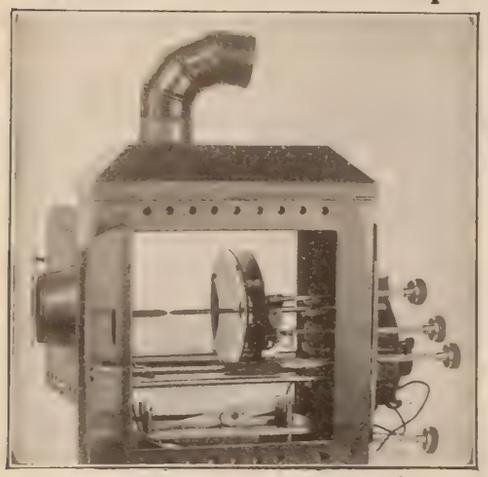
The final safeguard for success—



EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

and green may be chosen for use in the projector. At one time a red filter was used with a blue. At another time two different blues were used with the design and a flood through red was irised down half way and thrown onto the curtain. For those interested in the photography of colored objects the Eastman Kodak Company has prepared, "Color Plated Films, and Filters for Commercial Photography" which is distributed free on application, and "The Photography of Colored Objects" for which a charge of fifty cents is made.

(To be concluded next week)

Instrument for Outdoor Advertising Proving Success

The Tangley Company of Muscatine, Iowa, who manufacture the Calliaphone, recently have entered the motion picture field with this novelty instrument, which is suited not only to outdoor advertising, but to installation in a theatre.

Already a number of installations have been made, it is claimed, and a number of Calliaphones, mounted on Ford chassis for outdoor work, delivered to exhibitors in different parts of the country.

It is claimed by the manufacturers that the Tangley Calliaphone is the first new toned instrument that has been heard in forty years. It is small, light and compact, built practically of metal throughout, and is unaffected by weather conditions, so that it will stand rough usage in an automobile for street work in any kind of weather.

The instrument operates with electric motor, for theatre use, and has forty-three solid brass whistles, three and one-half octaves, chromatic scale and is played automatically or by hand, music rolls being available at low cost.

An interesting feature of the Calliaphone, is the tone control.

"The Gold Rush"—United Artists Egyptian, Hollywood

Express: "Roars greeted 'The Gold Rush.' Outshining even the powerful glare of the studio light which turned night into day, film stars of the first magnitude and their satellites filled Grauman's Egyptian theatre to pay tribute to Charlie Chaplin in his long-awaited 'Gold Rush,' his first comedy in several years. The Comedy King's picture is his longest and his greatest. It is constructed with more technical finish and builds its laughs more definitely on an ascending scale."

Hollywood News: "'The Gold Rush' is a masterpiece of life. It is the crowning achievement of the master comedian—No, the master artist. In 'The Gold Rush' the little man with the funny walk is no more. In his place has sprung a genius of human understanding a man who knows life, its humors, its pathos, its joys and its sorrows. Chaplin has done that which no other artist has done, he has recorded on thin film the soul of a man. He has created a masterpiece."

Times: "Charlie Chaplin has had his hour of sovereign triumph in the picture realm. There has never been a premiere equal to that of 'The Gold Rush', a dramatic comedy—'The Gold Rush' a super-comedy, one may well call it in size and elaborateness. This huge feature will go down as epoch-making, It is as daring and spectacular an experiment as has ever been attempted on the screen. It is amazing that comedy in the films shall have reached such a point in its development where a picture rivalling 'The Birth of a Nation', a 'Robin Hood' or a 'Thief of Bagdad', and from this trail Chaplin has at least come forth with the laurels of a pioneer."

Examiner: "Charlie Chaplin has given a Chaplin comedy of yore in his return to the silver sheet. Genius is exhibited in 'The Gold Rush'. Chaplain has returned, and he has come back with a rush in the 'The Gold Rush.' At Grauman's Egyptian theatre one of the greatest demonstrations which the film world ever had paid to one of its fellows was given to Charlie. Chaplin, after a three year absence from the screen came back, funny shoes, baggy pants and all. Every foot of 'The Gold Rush' showed the comedian as the world has grown to know and love him."

Daily News: "Charlie Chaplin reaches the pinnacle of his career in 'the Gold Rush' with more than the usual amount of pyrotechnics. His latest and probably greatest contribution to the screen was unfolded at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre before an assemblage of Los Angeles notables and screenland celebrities that packed the theatre to its doors. There are really two Chaplins in this epic of the Klondike gold pilgrimage, There is first, Charlie Chaplin the clown as we have heretofore seen him, and then there is Charlie Chaplin, the dramatic artist who plays tenderly upon the heart-strings."

Herald: "'The Gold Rush' is an epic comedy, and the star's best. Seldom has there been such unanimity of opinion on the artistic and general merits of an ambitious cinema production as was expressed by the vociferous applause and enthusiasm after the performance. 'The Gold Rush' is without exaggeration Chaplin's most stupendous effort. He has endeavored to make this his best picture, and I think you will agree, when you've witnessed it, that his genius-driven labors have not been in vain."

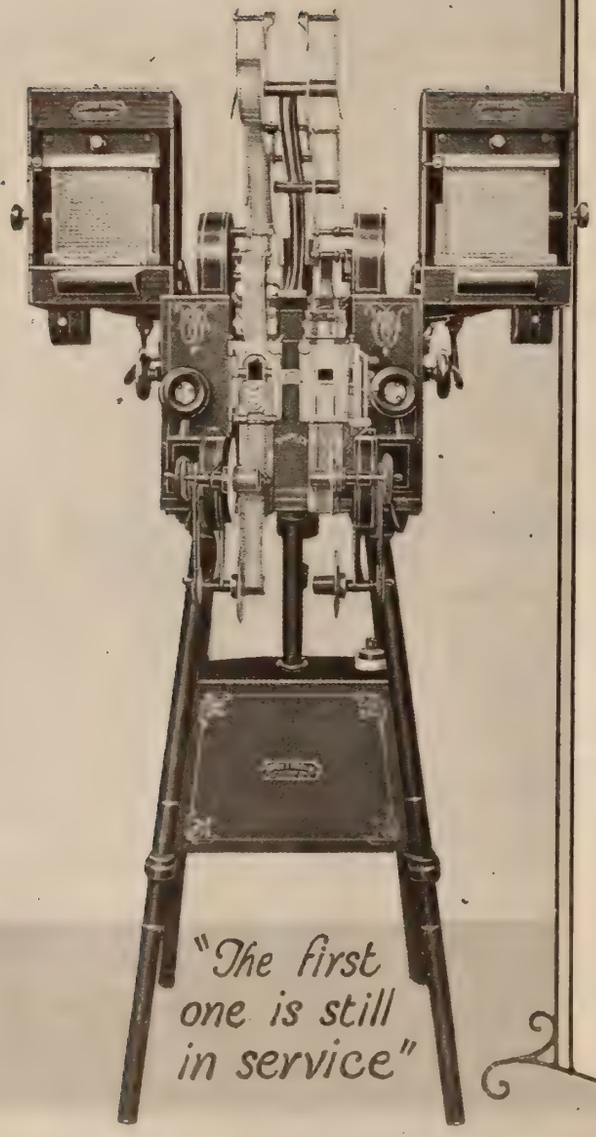
Record: "Charlie Chaplin triumphs. His new picture, 'The Gold Rush', evoked stormy applause, and it was magnificently presented. It is a picture nobody will want to miss seeing. It is by long odds the most pretentious he has ever sponsored and is a combination of the episodic method he introduced in 'A Woman of Paris' with his old personality of 'The Kid' and his earlier pictures, studded with thrills."

"The Sporting Chance"—Tiffany Colony, New York

Telegraph: "It is the best racing drama in a long, long time. The race itself is thrilling. It is a great example of an audience picture."

Evening World: "A thrill in every scene."

Mirror: "The Sporting Chance climaxes with a wow of a racing scene, guaranteed to thrill."



World: "Everyone will be thrilled by it.

Herald-Tribune: "No one need go to see it with the least doubt in his mind as to whether or not he will enjoy it."

Journal: "'The Sporting Chance' is excellent."

Telegram: "If you remember what Wildfire was like, then you will understand when it is said that 'The Sporting Chance' is more so."

Study Your Theatre From The Public's Standpoint

Study your theatre from the public's standpoint and your projection should be your first consideration.

To have good projection you must have good machines. Poorly designed or worn out projectors will spoil your whole show and besides are more expensive in the long run. No investment will pay you better profits than an investment in better projection. There is no better guarantee of perfect projection than a Simplex Projector.

The Simplex Projector can be depended upon for unfaltering performance over a long period of service. The improvement it makes in the presentation of pictures is readily noted and appreciated by any audience. It will pay for itself in a short time. And it may be purchased on very liberal terms.

What Simplex Service Means

Every Simplex distributor maintains a service organization consisting of a group of experienced men. These men make it their business to assist theatre owners in all matters pertaining to better projection so necessary to the successful operation of any theatre large or small.

The benefit of their experience is available to you without charge or obligation. If your projection is not satisfactory, call in a Simplex Service man. There is one in your district now.

Service—Plus

It makes no difference what kind of machine you are using. Simplex service is broader and goes farther than the selling of projectors. The good will we have won is not based on our products alone. For service plus co-operation built the Simplex reputation.

Do It Now

Now is the time to make your plans for improving your theatre. Have a big attraction for the opening of the fall season. Make a start toward the best projection by mailing the attached coupon:

What CECIL B.

WITH brilliant directorial, scenario and production staffs working as a unit under his direct supervision—with stars of proved box-office value ideally cast in great stories by world-famous authors—Cecil B. De Mille is working out a group of twelve master productions that, individually or as a unit, surpass any productions ever offered to motion picture exhibitors in the history of the industry.

First rumblings of a mighty avalanche of entertainment

DE MILLE is going to do!

THE tremendous scope and superlative quality of the Cecil B. De Mille product for the coming year are forecast in the showmanship calibre of his first three attractions for 1925-26.

"THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY," the first of two big Specials directed by Cecil B. De Mille, is a production to which the word stupendous can be fittingly applied. Big in theme, spectacular in action, rich in scenic investiture, with a cast of extraordinary distinction, this picture will equal anything Cecil B. De Mille has ever done.

This big personally directed Special, with the first two personally supervised productions, will serve as a criterion by which the entire product can be gauged.

"HELL'S HIGHROAD," the initial production starring Leatrice Joy, with Edmund Burns, Julia Faye and Robert Edeson heading a brilliant cast, directed by Rupert Julian, is a smashing drama of the New York "gold coast," with all the spectacular thrill of "The Ten Commandments" and with a story that outromances "Male and Female."

"THE COMING OF AMOS." stars Rod La Rocque in the first of his four pictures. It is a graphic picturization of the world-famous William J. Locke's most popular novel, sales of which have already reached six figures. It is a melodramatic comedy—swift in action—with the festive Monte Carlo and the Riviera as background. Paul Sloane directs.

ROD LA ROCQUE

These three attractions are typical of the super-excellence of the Cecil B. De Mille product—a product that has consistently led the industry in box-office successes.

Attention Mr. J. M. Fieldman, Sales Manager.

My Dear Mr Fieldman:

Kindly be advised we are securing wonderful results with the Artic Nu-Air Ventilating System which you installed in our Colonial Theatre in this city. It is far surpassing our expectations and is delivering a greater volume of air than we anticipated. The outfit is so satisfactory that we are now placing a double system in the Jefferson, which is one of our largest houses, and have also arranged for a similar installation for the Allen Theatre. Incidentally, we are taking out a system in the Jefferson which cost us several thousand dollars and replacing same with yours.

We feel perfectly free to recommend your apparatus to anyone interested in securing maximum results with a minimum expenditure.

Assuring you we appreciate the personal interest you have shown in our orders and wishing you continued success, I am

Very truly yours,

Greater Movie Season Bulletins

BECAUSE we construe the Greater Movie Season to mean a Greater Business Season for the entire motion picture industry, we are contributing this page for the cause. For the remaining weeks preceding the season's opening date of August third, this page will carry the important bulletins to be issued to the various branches of the industry.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

THE exhibitors of the United States will owe a great deal to the 200 or 250 upstanding, hard-hitting men who are the brains and brawn of the various Greater Movie Season Campaigns.

Each Greater Movie Season drive has a General Manager—a theatre manager or a theatre publicity man—and he is the man who is carrying the load and doing the work that is putting over the campaign in his city. Each manager has been elected by the local exhibitors because they knew he was the kind of man who would neglect his own business to do a worth-while job for the good of everybody.

And that confidence is not misplaced.

THE Greater Movie Season Campaigns, like all such co-operative movements, depend for their success upon a hard-working leader. When the drive is over, the cities that have received the most benefit from it will not necessarily be those in which the most money is spent, or those in which are to be found the biggest and finest theatres. They will be those cities in which the exhibitors were so fortunate as to select for their General Manager a man who was unselfish enough to throw his heart and soul into the movement and to work night and day for the good of motion pictures in his community.

THE General Outdoor Advertising Company is leading the way with contributions of billboard space throughout the country for the campaigns. They're not the only contributors, however. The smaller plant owners are helping out also.

It is estimated that about 16,000 boards will be given by the poster advertising companies throughout the United States.

THE punch behind the Greater Movie Season campaign lies in the fact that it is a co-operative movement. Take advantage of this fact.

Your Mayor, your Governor, your Civic Bodies, your Rotary Clubs, your Women's Clubs, your Chamber of Commerce will back a co-operative movement of this kind, where they never could be induced to join in a movement for the benefit of only one theatre or for any particular production.

NEARLY every city has received permission from the city authorities to stencil streets, to decorate lamp posts, and in many cases they're even going to hang cards on the "Stop" and "Go" traffic signs.

THE Texas exhibitors are in. The M. P. T. O. of Texas have requested that a Campaign Book be sent to each of the members.

H. M. RICHEY, General Manager of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan is touring his state helping exhibitors get under way with their campaigns. That's real service.

THIRTY-EIGHT HUNDRED theatres now in the campaign.

AN EDITOR

The Week in Review

WILLIAM R. FRASER, General Manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, believes that "in the motion picture comedy lies the main hope for the advancement of the cinematographic art."

This is a most interesting subject. Mr. Fraser's views are of course those of a real expert.

"The greatest progress of any branch of the motion picture profession has been made in the field of comedies," continues Mr. Fraser. "It was just about five years ago that the old fashioned slapstick comedy started on the down trail in public fancy. In its place came the type of screen comedy exemplified by Harold Lloyd's 'Grandma's Boy,' comedies with a thought, one might call them. This type of fun creator has reached such an appeal with the public that the slapstick brand of comedy has been almost figuratively driven off the map. Of course, there always will be a field for the slapstick comedy, certain types of audiences that will support the broad mirth making. But that audience will grow smaller all the time.

"There unquestionably is more thought, more genius behind the comedies of the screen, than in any other type of picture making. The motion picture comedian must have a more intelligent outlook on the screen art than other stars. His ingenuity is brought into greater play. Why? In the first place, the average dramatic star does what he is told to do by a director. The average director has a script to follow, and the script writer usually has a high powered novel, stage play or a good original story to work from.

"The comedian, or anyway in the case of Harold Lloyd, usually has a staff of assistants to co-operate with him but his decision is final in all cases. It is folly for him to attempt to produce an outsider's idea, for there is not one high grade writer in a hundred, or maybe in a thousand, who can write and gag motion picture comedies. That is an art all its own.

"FROM the workshop of the comedian comes the true representation of what the motion picture was intended for. They turn out ideas that are purely cinematographic, and which would be impossible to reproduce on the legitimate stage. The best examples of this are 'Safety Last,' 'Girl Shy,' and now 'The Freshman' which is Harold's latest work. The building climb in 'Safety Last,' could not possibly be done except in real life or on celluloid. The great chase which marked the climax of 'Girl Shy' never could be produced on the biggest stage in the world, and with the best stage technicians handling the idea. And for that matter it would be an utter impossibility for the stage to repeat the football performance which stands as a highlight of 'The Freshman.' Virtually any of the so-called society dramas, and some of the thrillers of the dramatic field could, and have been, done on the stage. Consequently, in my estimation the motion picture comedy stands representative of the motion picture art at its best.

"The skill of the individual is given a freer rein in the comic field, than in the dramatic. The comedian must be an expert at construction, direction, acting, cutting, in fact of every other division of the production. The stars in the dramatic line need know only how to act, except of course in a few cases where the stars are their own producers.

"I LOOK for the comedy to make just as much progress in the next five years as it has in the last five. New ideas are being created every day. Pictorially the comedy has progressed very rapidly. Stories in Lloyd comedies stand comparison with the best in the dramatic. And one of the main points about successful comedy making, which many dramatic producers have yet to learn, is that a picture is best ended when its story is told. Many big pictures have been ruined by being dragged out interminably, because the producer insisted on keeping in his film scenes that were 'pretty' or cost a lot of money to shoot, and which handicapped rather than enhanced the value of the story. You can take any Harold Lloyd production, and find that it is cut right down to the meat. There is not an excess foot included. I have seen an entire reel thrown away after a preview, in order that the action which followed might be strengthened, and because the reel slowed up the action more than was expected by Harold and his staff.

"Producers have much to learn from the comedy makers, and this is certainly going to be true in the days to come. Comedies are progressing, while many of the leaders in the production of dramatic offerings have reached the stagnant stage."

THERE is a natural ebb and flood of motion picture employes from one company to another, which is a phenomenon of any big business which has had such a sudden and mammoth growth as the film industry. It is a stage in the evolution and stabilization of the companies themselves from the more or less chaotic experimental state at their inception.

ON BROADWAY

By William A. Johnston

It is therefore natural that there should be a certain flux in the personnel of the producing and distributing companies. But in some instances of late this natural change has become a predatory foray of the trained and specialized force of companies which have, through months and even years of highly specialized training, built up a personnel that has accomplished highly gratifying results.

E. A. Eschmann of First National who is the type of executive that builds up his own strong and highly effective selling organization, recruits his men almost entirely from within his own force and moulds them into a compact body that stands at the head of field organization. In the course of a conversation on this tendency of certain companies he had several things of interest to say.

"THERE are always certain companies and certain executives who lack the ability to build up and organize a force of their own," said Mr. Eschmann. "These companies have made, are now making, and will continue to make overtures to members of the force of any company which has become highly efficient through careful training and compact and highly specialized organization. They have been in the business long enough to have created and developed a field force of their own. That they have not done so is proof of their lack of organizing ability. They attempt to make up for their lack by turning their effort to weaning men from companies which have built up a productive force, through the offer of more money. They believe that a productive field force can be acquired through the expenditure of money instead of through the long and patient training which creates loyalty and esprit de corps along with selling ability.

"Their reasoning, from their own point of view, may be good. It is only too apt to prove harmful, in the long run, to the men whom it thus recruits. In the first place it is not good reasoning to presume that an outsider is a better judge of a man's earning power than is his own official family. Flattery is their usual method of approach. They tell the man they want that he is not being paid what he is worth. In some instances they may be right. But if it is true, it is the man's own fault for not proving his worth to his company by the outstanding results he obtains. The only way any company can determine a man's worth is by his performance. No outsider can know a man's performance with his own company better than that company. His own, the people he is constantly in contact with, know him better than can any outsider.

"THE outsider who can't build up his own force, is seldom able to keep together one that is recruited from other companies. When the special purpose for which they were wanted is accomplished, they are the first to be let go. Not appreciating loyalty in others, they have no loyalty to their own force. Not having trained and built up their own force, they do not understand the problems which confront them, and drop them like a hot poker when they fall down—probably through no fault of their own.

"The Trojans had an old saying, 'Beware of Greeks bearing gifts.' It was through the gift of the wooden horse, concealing armed Greeks, that Troy fell. That is a saying which trained and highly paid employees should carefully consider when offered more money by an outsider."

THE summer patronage may have fallen off to some extent with the Broadway picture theatres, but it is worth anyone's time to look over the various programs offered at the Capitol, Strand, Rivoli, Rialto and Colony. The features at these respective theatres are all marked by exceptionally fine acting. There is ZaSu Pitts playing a loveless heroine in "Pretty Ladies" at the Capitol and sounding all the depths of a forlorn romance seeker. At the Strand Corinne Griffith rises to new emotional heights in a difficult role. We've never seen her more charming and expressive than in "The Marriage Whirl." The Rialto, presenting "Marry Me!" gives its patrons the chance to sympathize with Florence Vidor who, like ZaSu Pitts, longs to meet her man and marry him. Miss Vidor humanizes the character with splendid feeling. The Rivoli is carrying "Night Life of New York" this week—and its patrons are assured of good acting from Dorothy Gish, Rod La Rocque and Ernest Torrence. The Colony is presenting "Cyrano DeBergerac"—the French-Italian picture—holding it over for the second week. And no wonder. It is only a pictorial achievement, but it offers some of the best pantomime ever revealed. Pierre Magnier, in the title role, gives one of the screen's great performances.

As Others See Us

THE report made by the British exhibitor delegation to America, and submitted to the recent Summer Conference of the C. E. A. at Glasgow, is quite a document. Some of it is rare reading. Much of it is straight-out criticism; a little of it is praise, and all of it is interesting.

The topics discussed are these: Theatres and Classes of Entertainment; Admission Prices; Hours of Opening and Closing; Price of Films; Equipment and Presentation; Censorship; Trade-Showings; The Producer-Exhibitor; The Independent Producer and Exhibitor; and the M. P. T. O. A. Convention at Milwaukee.

The delegation was amazed at the frankness of exhibitors in giving details of their business. Says report: "This information was given with an openness and frankness as to the most intimate details of their houses such as it may be doubted are given by the British proprietor even to their own auditors and certainly never to the income tax commissioners. They told their takings, their overhead expenses, their building costs, mortgage interest, the price they paid for films, even their profits, and there is little doubt that with small encouragement they might have lent the delegation the keys of their safes."

Britain is superior to America in projection, the delegation thinks. Some of the other observations follow:—

"There is little or no criticism of films such as we have in this country, but there is a superabundant amount of press notice."

"The people of America must have entertainment. It is as imperative as iced water, and more imperative than alcohol. They are not a people critical. Almost any picture will get over somewhere. In that sense there are really no bad films in America. Like beer in England, some are better than others, but so long as they are films they will have patrons of some kind or another."

"Not the best entertainment offered in British cinemas can compare favorably with the best in America."

As to film rentals, the delegation found: "All the evidence obtained from widely scattered areas points to one conclusion with respect to the prices paid for film hire. Proportionately, film hire is just about half the amount which renters obtain from this country."

Regarding the salaries of players: "Investigation proved that although some of the publicity men's figures were, like the report of Mark Twain's death —'grossly exaggerated'—the substratum of truth is sufficiently serious to justify the not unnatural alarm experienced by exhibitors who realize that in the long run they pay the piper. The frantic competition by studios to secure all the stars is probably more to blame than the artists themselves. Who will not sell in a rising market?"

And on the producer-exhibitor question, the delegation "is of the opinion that the domination of the producer-exhibitor is a distinct menace to the American independent exhibitor; that it is steadily growing, and that its effects must ultimately react upon the industry in this country."

In its discussion of the Milwaukee Convention, the report says among other things: "The fact that your delegation was not invited to speak, either as a chorus or soloists, was a noticeable though not depressing circumstance."

The report concludes with this parting shot: "America is a great country—perhaps not quite so great as it thinks it is, but great. Its population potentialities are enormous. If it has more mountains and deserts than it can conveniently use or export at the moment, there is no limit to the uses they can ulimately be put—and it does love the film."

All of which should be read in the light of Britain's departed glory as the world film center, and with a due sense of humor.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"You may be big, but when I speak, you mind, declares Alf Martin, Canadian ranger to John Philip Kolb "heavy" in "The Knockout" (First National).

DOUBLING FOR IZAAC WALTON

"WHOO.....Whoo.....Whoo..Whoo.." And the Southwestern Limited carried Bill Johnston far away from the heat wave, the milling crowds of Broadway, the cries of "Wuxtry," —and the editorial sanctum. He chose the heart of the summer to get away from it all. Weighed down with enough piscatorial paraphernalia for an expedition up the Nile which necessitated the porter, suh, to use a couple of compartments to store the flies, poles, tackle, boots—and what not, Bill looked the picture of a happy vacationist as he stepped aboard the train.

It is off to the deep-tangled wildwood for him—a wildwood dotted with dozens of lakes swarming with fish. The speckled trout, the spotted bass and that fine upstanding specie, the muscalonge, are unaware they're flirting with danger. But Bill is armed with every kind of fishing implement, except a harpoon, to lift them out of Davy Jones' Locker.

There will be times when the fish will refuse to bite. Then in imitation of the youthful nimrod on the banks of a creek, he will prop himself against a convenient tree, put the line between his toes, pull the straw bonnet over his eyes and dream sweet dreams of aquariums.

The open sky, the wide horizon will be his world. And to catch the marvelous vistas Bill will set up his Pathex camera. Then when the long winter night closes in at Great Neck he can retire to a soft divan, recline in the darkness—punctuated only by the glow of his Corona Perfecto, and be wafted away on the tides of a perfect summer as the scenes reveal his vacation spot—the Nipigon Regions of Northern Ontario.

As a fisherman's tales are never believed, Bill has fortified himself with the Pathex and a Kodak. These will bring mute evidence of his skill. He has gone to a sportsman's paradise—and something tells us that he will come back with enough fish to open one of those restaurants carrying the sign—Sea Food.

A UNIQUE PARTY

LAST Wednesday found Hope Hampton staging a unique party at the Fort Lee studios where she is engaged on the production of "The Unfair Sex." When the representatives of the press arrived they registered complete surprise. The expressions on their faces might have suggested—"What—Christmas here so soon?" And they had walked in out of reach of a scorching July sun. Yet there was the Christmas tree as one of the principal attractions. You see Miss Hampton is too busy around the Holidays to celebrate and having missed an Xmas celebration last year due to her legitimate engagements she decided to hold her Yule-Tide party in July.

The "getaway station" was the Algonquin Hotel and when the autos deposited the guests at the studio everyone was anticipating an afternoon and evening of real jollification. Miss Hampton made a splendid host in her role of Lady Santa Claus. Her July Xmas Party in which the merrymakers danced and dined and gave expression to Holiday greetings will go down in the book as a Most Happy Occasion.

ATTA BOY

WE are shouting "Atta Boy!" at Lou Marangella, the demon publicity writer. The expression is one of Lou's favorites. Full of breezy enthusiasm he would stalk into the office and shout "Atta Boy!" when we told him—"Yes, Lou, we'll run it for you." As every romance needs an introduction—the characters to be planted, et cetera, we'll begin by telling the world that Lou press-agented the "Ben Hur" production in Italy. He was taken to the land of the Caesars to act as interpreter and to see to it that editors were fed reams upon reams of publicity about the picture.

Now the story swings into its romance. The pulse quickens—the heart interest leads its appeal. It was while Lou was staying in Paris during the continental journey that he met HER. His boundless enthusiasm carried him to the heights of ecstasy. With all the alacrity that he places copy on an editor's desk he found himself engaged. Last May he hopped back to the city on the Seine and on the fourteenth of the month the engagement culminated in marriage.

The heroine—or rather the bride was Olga Calve (Countess Goubarev) who has a fine record of achievements. She was a member of the Russian nobility and fought in the World War as a lieutenant of the Russian Black Army. She has had considerable stage and screen experience on her native steppes and in France—having played leads in French films the past two years. She also appeared in "A Son of the Sahara," which was made in Algeria by Edwin Carewe for First National.

Lou has brought a twist to the familiar plot. It is usually the American girl who marries a title. In this case it is the American man. We offer the Marangellas our sincere felicitations.

While making a personal appearance in St. Paul in conjunction with "The Crimson Runner" (Prod. Dist. Corp.) Priscilla Dean tried her hand at packing chocolates with Phillipo Gersdorfo (who isn't seen in the picture) supervising the operation. Customers reported the chocolates tasted better than usual, it is reported.

EYES ON TENNESSEE

THE whole world has its eyes on the State of Tennessee. A big array of legal talent has swooped down on the little town of Dayton to defend Professor Scopes in his trial. The defendant having come out for evolution is being tried for teaching the Darwinian theory. There's a big scare being registered out in California, too. The leading luminaries are keeping an anxious eye on Napoleon, Josephine and Joe Martin. If it is established that we once lived in the tree tops these monks will have a big laugh. As it is they are thinking of starting their own production units. It has taken centuries of publicity to put them in the limelight and they refuse to take a back seat among the top-most branches. Joe Martin has already been interviewed on the question. Like a politician or a court witness, or both, he refuses to answer on advice of Consul. There's a good monk, too.

HARLAN CONVALESCING

THE followers of Kenneth Harlan (there's a legion of them) will be glad to know that he is rapidly recovering from an operation for appendicitis with which he was stricken while on location. He was rushed to St. Vincent's hospital in Hollywood following an acute attack of the ailment last Saturday—and it is believed that prompt action by the surgeons saved his life.

SOME COMEDY

"I LAUGHED so hard my sides ache." That was the comment we heard from three different persons after the private showing of Harold Lloyd's newest comedy, "The Freshman." It is a correct indication of what this gem of a picture has in store for you. We've never seen a funnier piece—than this take-off on college life which the comedian and his clever assistants have concocted. We've had college stories—and college stories—but we've never had one that showed life on the campus with half the spirit, sympathy, humor and accuracy.

There is a place for everything here—and everything is in place. The ground is thoroughly planted with incident and gags which sprout with the fullest expression. Harold starts off for Tate—determined to be the college idol—its greatest hero. But he is a perfect boob and doesn't realize that he is a joke.

The early scenes build up the sympathy for this boy who would make good. He is so sure of himself—and yet everything he does

A view of the famous desk which John M. Flagler, big oil (not Butter and Egg) man caused to be built for his private office in 1883, and which Johnny Hines is using as a prop for "The Live Wire (First National).

is absolutely all wrong. He would make the team, but they use him for a tackling dummy. He would give a dance for the sake of popularity. And his tuxedo is merely basted together. As it falls apart the laughs come straight from the diaphragm.

But the most hilarious comedy is contained in the climax when Harold pleads to be sent in as the last substitute. The boys, fighting hard for good old Tate, are up against a strong team. Harold has been allowed to join the team as a water boy though they don't try to humiliate him on that count. So he rushes in—and not knowing what position to play dashes in anywhere—sometimes on the opposite side—and is thrown, tossed—and pummeled to a fare-you-well. But he picks up a fumble and scores a touchdown. He has made good for Tate and the girl.

The new invention of these scenes spells ingenious work on the part of the Lloyd outfit. To enumerate every laugh would occupy too much space. But it seems to us as if the piece contained hundreds of them.

As for the atmosphere it is accurate. The campus is painted in true colors—and the relaxation side of college life has been brought out with fine zest and background. It surely looks like a sell-out. Why not? Lloyd's pictures mean something. And this tops them all as a laugh producer. Wait 'til you see that football game. Harold does everything with that football but make it talk.

SALUTATIONS

CONGRATULATIONS are being showered upon Mr. and Mrs. Jack Alicoate over the new addition to the family. As a tribute to the birth of this nation—as a fine gesture in favor of 100 per cent patriotism, the youngster—who has been given the monicker of Mary Patricia—made her debut on the Fourth of July. The infant by selecting Fire-Cracker Day to say "Howdy" to the world joins a pair of our best champions of Old Glory, Calvin Coolidge and George M. Cohen.

Billy Dooley, new Christie star, reports for work in the first of a series of ten comedies he will make for Educational release. Billy must be a late riser judging from the way he threw his clothes on, or perhaps he's one of those misfit sailors.

THE RIESENFELD LUNCHEON

HUGO RIESENFELD, the impressario of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion, tendered a luncheon to the motion picture editors and critics last Friday at the Astor Roof in honor of Ben Bernie. It was to introduce the popular jazz band leader whose melody boys have supplanted the symphony orchestra at the Rivoli—the Bernie band making their debut this week.

Dr. Riesenfeld said one of the reasons which promoted him to take out the symphony orchestra and present the jazz band in its place was that he discovered that all six of the Broadway houses were playing the overture from "William Tell" during one and the same week.

AUTHOR! AUTHOR!!

IT is with a cry of "Author! Author!!" that we page Bob Dexter, erstwhile advertising manager for First National. Bob has always been a gifted story-writer—and he can weave words with all the art of a Jack London—and write just as vividly. Under the name of Gayne Dexter he has a story in the August issue of Hearst's International and Cosmopolitan Magazine—a story of a Heathen Chinese entitled "Serpent of Lies."

Members of the cast and technical staff of the Earl Hudson unit filming "The Half Way Girl" (First National) snapped between scenes. Seated in the foreground are John Francis Dillon, director, and Doris Kenyon, featured player.

VERY "DOGGY"

THEY are very "doggy" in Loew's State theatre, New York, this week. Trying it on the dog as it were. Balto, the lead dog of Gunnar Kasson's team, which carried the diphtheria serum into Nome—and put over the best human interest story the newspapers have featured in a decade—is on the vaudeville program, supported by his master and several other huskies. The picture feature is "Wild Justice" starring Strongheart.

We don't know whether Balto registered jealousy over the famous screen canine who wished to please the husky by trying it out on the dog. But we have learned that Balto is indifferent toward New York. He refuses to take an ice-wagon seriously and confetti strewn around the floor of his dressing room is not the kind of "snow" to tempt him. He is rarin' to get back in Alaska where dogs are dogs.

FINIS

I AM writing my last line for MOTION PICTURE NEWS—writing with a lump in my throat. It's the attachments—the associations—the friendships that endure. Time makes its marks and these are never erased. But as we march along with Time we pause and pay our tribute to the things that count. It may be a fond leave-taking of someone very dear to us; it may be the ineffable charm of some glorious vista we've viewed; it may be some token treasured through the years. The memory of it all lights up and we dwell upon it with misty eyes.

I feel as if all the boys in this office were at a small railroad station and I were aboard the train which would take me around the bend and out of sight. Words don't count for much on such an occasion. The little tinkly bell at the crossing has grown fainter and fainter. A moment more and it is silenced. And the parting is over.

Catching a train pounding through the dusk of a quiet night and bidding the boys good-by is the way I feel in leaving the News. The friendships formed here are ineffaceable. The morning salutations, the nightly "So Long! See You Tomorrow," the constant associations with the staff—the good fellowship that fairly saturates this office—these are the things that count—and these are the things that make it so difficult to leave.

It's been a pleasure to work for Bill Johnston. Just a gentleman's agreement to express yourself according to your viewpoint. That's Bill's way. It's the fair way, too. No wonder the boys work conscientiously to sell the News. There's a goal you see—and that is self-expression.

To leave this office and all that its atmosphere stands for is something that can't be expressed in words. It strikes deeper than that. Words, after all, can only give voice to your true feelings. And six years of pleasant relations cannot be effaced with a mere handshake and a "Wish you the best of luck." You can't erase a memory.

I leave the News with real regret. I leave the magazine wishing it continued success and prosperity—I leave it trusting I have served its readers and established lasting friendships for it. Hail and Farewell,

LARRY REID.

Robert Edeson appears to be quite a high-brow in this eccentric mirror, but it does not seem to phase Rupert Julian, who is giving him the w. k. Ha! Ha! Edeson is being featured in support of Leatrice Joy in Hell's Highroad" (Prod. Dist. Corp.).

Mid-Week Edition of M. P. News Scores A Great Hit

AN enthusiastic welcome from the industry greeted the appearance of the first issue of the Mid-Week Edition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week. On every hand, it was hailed as an important innovation in trade paper journalism, and marking a distinct step forward in service to the industry.

Recognition of the necessity for a medium which is devoted exclusively to the needs of the big, little exhibitor was widespread, and comments were heard everywhere in the trade that "The News has again hit the mark."

Among the many expressions of approval, addressed to William A. Johnston, are these:

Hiram Abrams, President. United Artists:

I want to congratulate you on your Midweek Edition of Motion Picture News, and particularly on the idea back of this new form of service to "The Big Little Exhibitor," as you so aptly characterize the motion picture theatre man in the small city.

The small exhibitor in the small town undoubtedly is an enormous factor in the film industry. This is the man who most needs and who will benefit most from the kind of service you are rendering through this new edition and I believe you are as well offering a great service to the industry in general. I wish you every success in this step.

Richard A. Rowland, General Manager, First National:

Congratulations on the first issue of the new Mid-Week edition. It is a knock-out—just the thing for the small town exhibitor. I am sure that both producers and distributors will welcome the service you are giving these big-little-theatres.

R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President, Universal:

You are to be commended for undertaking to supply the small exhibitor with news, reviews and reports on pictures prepared from the small theatre point of view. The new Mid Week Edition of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS seems to be ideal in that respect.

Universal has always been a staunch supporter of the small theatre man and has consistently guided its policies so as to help him. I am sure that the small exhibitor will welcome and support this move on the part of the NEWS to look at film conditions from his side of the fence. The best of luck.

Joseph M. Seider, President of M. P. T. O. of New Jersey:

I have read with interest your editorial anent the new edition of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS—designed for the exhibitor in the small town.

As you know, we tried at our convention to show our members how to "Bring Broadway to Main Street," and we feel that you are carrying this idea out through the medium of your new mid-week edition of the NEWS.

We recognize the vital influence which the theatre in the small town or neighborhood bears to the progress of this industry of ours, and feel that they are entitled to the same consideration, giving them every help and advantage, as is enjoyed by the large theatres in the metropolis and larger centers. Such a purpose must meet with our approval. Wishing you the success you merit.

E. A. Eschmann, Manager of Distribution, First National:

In my opinion the Mid-Week edition of the NEWS fills an important need. Too frequently there has been a tendency to concentrate on big theatres. As you point out, they are important, but the smaller exhibitor is important, too, and it is gratifying to find a publication devoted primarily to his needs.

With best wishes for the success of the Mid-Week News.

A. M. Botsford, Advertising Manager, Famous Players-Lasky:

The small town exhibitor has many of the problems that confront the big city theatres but he gets them later and a lot of new problems besides.

No filing system of trade papers has ever been devised whereby the small town exhibitor will be able to go back over weeks past and dig up things in the trade papers that'll help him.

In the new magazine you are giving him something timed just right. If it is correctly edited and the small town problems rightly understood by your editors, there is no question of its value to the trade. Best wishes for success.

Nat G. Rothstein, Advertising Director for F. B. O.:

I think your idea of a mid-week edition is a great idea. It will undoubtedly reach many exhibitors that Motion Picture News never reached before.

It's reasonable price enables any and every exhibitor both big and little throughout the country to subscribe for it.

My compliments on your idea. I wish you every success with your new "baby." Kindest regards.

Samuel Spring, Secretary-Treasurer, First National:

I think you ought to be complimented on your enterprise in starting a Mid-Week edition of the News particularly designed for small towns. You should receive the support of all enterprising exhibitors.

C. C. Burr, Managing Director, B. & H. Enterprises:

Just looked over the copy of the "Midweek" edition of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. This is a great idea—cannot understand why no one ever thought of it before.

It would seem that the News really fulfills its mission and the whole idea is in line with the leadership of thought and in action which you have ever maintained in your field. Congratulations and best wishes.

J. G. Bachmann, Schulerg Productions:

Let me congratulate you upon the step you have taken in starting the Mid-Week edition of the NEWS. The first number is interesting and useful from cover to cover and fills, I believe, a very definitely felt want for a trade medium to interest the smaller theatre. It is sure to be a success both for producer and exhibitor.

Good luck to the "Midweek"!

W. Ray Johnston, Rayart:

I was very much interested in receiving the copy of your Midweek Edition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, first issue dated July 11th. I want to congratulate you on this additional service to your subscribers. With best wishes for your publication.

Thomas Hamlin, Editor, New York Film Curb:

"Your new Mid-Week edition of Motino Picture News just arrived and it interested me so keenly that I immediately dropped all work on my own publication and proceeded to read your new idea thoroughly from start to finish.

"I cheerfully brand it a big time winner for the small town exhibitor and a valuable aid to those theatre-owners operating in towns of less than two-thousand population.

"May the new Mid-Week Motion Picture News grow and prosper."

Laurence Reid Resigns From News to Head Movie Monthly

LAURENCE REID, for six years the distinguished photoplay critic of Motion Picture News, is resigning this week to take an important post with the Brewster publications.

Mr. Reid becomes Editor of Movie Monthly, and a member of the editorial staffs of Motion Picture Classic and Motion Picture Magazine.

In the industry the name of Laurence Reid is a symbol for painstaking, intelligent reviews, presenting the reactions of an expert to hundreds of pictures a year.

He began his career as a reviewer in 1914 on the Evening Mail, continued it with the New York Review and the Dramatic Mirror.

Besides contributing reviews to The News, Mr. Reid has done notable work as a special writer. Each year he has written a critical resumé of the outstanding pictures of the year for the News Holiday Editions. Each week he had written "Pictures and People," the only department of its kind in the trade publication field, and recognized for its clever comments on personalities in the industry.

With real regret, Motion Picture News accepts Mr. Reid's resignation. He has been an exceptionally valued and versatile member of the staff. Larger opportunities and bigger achievement are ahead of him, and in his new work every member of the News family wishes him all success and Godspeed.

Announcement of Mr. Reid's successor will be made next week.

Vote For Free Casting Bureau

A. M. P. P. Directors Move to Operate "Extra" Agency Without Cost to Players

THE proposed casting bureau for extra or day employees which is to be organized by the Association of Motion Picture Producers in Los Angeles will be operated without fee costs to the players obtaining employment through this agency, it was unanimously decided at a Directors' Meeting held in Hollywood, July 13.

Heretofore the extra has paid ten per cent and upward daily to an agency for securing his position. Under this new arrangement the full amount of the voucher will go to the employee. The decision to maintain an absolutely free bureau is the result of a long thorough study by the Association, a cooperative survey and helpful suggestions from the Russell Sage Foundation, and with the approval of the California State Labor Commission.

The economic results of establishing this bureau will be more far-reaching than anything yet done in relation to employees. It will automatically wipe out of existence all questionable employment agencies, make-up schools, scenario schools and other pretended agencies preying on a gullible public and giving nothing in return.

The records in the office of the Labor Commission show that in the past ten years eighty-five agencies have been closed because of their questionable methods or have gone out of business through lack of support.

This entire matter is in the hands of the executive committee of the association for execution, and in the near future they will arrange for the financing of this bureau and the establishment of its offices.

It is interesting to note that annually this industry has over two hundred thousand placements of casual labor, the largest number of casual labor placements of any industry, and these are divided among approximately thirty thousand people.

High School Tax is Paid by Harrisburg Theatres

Three picture theatres are listed among the twenty properties paying the highest school tax in Harrisburg, Pa., according to the Evening News of that city. Twenty per cent of the total school tax is paid by the twenty properties in which the Colonial, the Orpheum, and the Majestic figure prominently. While these twenty properties are not the highest taxed in the city, they are among the highest, the newspaper explains.

The Colonial pays a tax of $5,085; the Majestic, which shows vaudeville and pictures, pays $2,520; and the Orpheum pays $2,100.

U. S. Exports of Films in May Nearly 32,000,000

Nearly 32,000,000 feet of moving picture film, with a value of well over a million dollars, were exported from the United States during the month of May, according to figures compiled by the Department of Commerce.

Exports of positive film aggregated 18,376,514 feet, with a value of $541,653, of which 3,992,538 feet, valued at $107,761 went to the United Kingdom; 2,679,110 feet, worth $80,201, to Australia; 1,914,840 feet, valued at $77,021, to Canada; and 1,677,019 feet, valued at $54,120, to Argentina.

Negatives exported aggregated 1,068,824, with a value of $261,981, our most important market being the United Kingdom to which 902,180 feet, valued at $238,509, were exported. Exports of raw stock amounted to 12,335,815 feet, valued at $255,949, of which the United Kingdom alone took 10,666,792 feet, with a value of $217,524.

H. Wayne Pierson Will Export Film

H. Wayne Pierson, until recently General Manager in the Far East for the United Artists Corporation has opened an office at 807 Longacre Building, New York, to handle films for export to Japan, China, The Philippines, Indo-China, Strait Settlements and F. M. S., Java, India, Burma and Ceylon.

Pierson has spent the past three years in the Far East, is intimately associated with the important buyers of that section and has a first-hand knowledge of the motion pictures suitable for distribution in each country he represents.

Ogden Alhambra Looted by Thieves

Thieves made away with $1,000 at the Alhambra Theatre in Ogden, Utah, last Monday morning, after rendering the night watchman unconscious and looting the safe. The loot would have been much greater had not the Vaudeville artists on the bill been paid off the night previously. The police have not yet unearthed a clue to the robbery.

Plan Public Tribute to Sydney S. Cohen

A PUBLIC tribute, which will probably take the form of a banquet, to Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A., is being planned by a group of Independent producers and distributors in New York, in recognition of Mr. Cohen's accomplishments in creating a favorable exhibitor opinion toward the independent branch of the industry.

The arrangements committee is as follows:

Chairman, Samuel Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation; Whitman, Bennett; B. P. Schulberg, head of the company bearing his name; J. G. Bachman, treasurer of the same company; Fred H. Elliott, executive secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America and Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia, vice-president of that organization.

Country Waits Greater Movie Season August Campaign

Perfected Organization Assures Event's Success

THE entire country from New York to Los Angeles stands organized for the national Greater Movie Season, beginning in August. Field representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., of which Will H. Hays is president, have developed, in conjunction with exhibitors and exchange executives, ninety co-operative campaigns all territorial in scope.

Cincinnati, Baltimore, Spokane, Schenectady, Akron, Houston, and Birmingham, Ala., adopted the national plan last week, with William A. Clark of the Palace Theatre, general manager for Cincinnati; Sam R. Abrams of the Rialto Theatre, for Houston; James Roach of the State Theatre for Schenectady; Ray Grombacher, Liberty Theatre, for Spokane; and L. J. Callinan, Assistant-secretary of the Akron Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association for Akron.

Officers and committee-men elected at a meeting of theatre owners in Birmingham are: B. H. Morney, Trianion Theatre, chairman; R. M. Kennedy, Capitol Theatre, Secretary; D. R. Faunce, Strand Theatre, finance; E. A. Vinson, Loew's Temple Theatre, director of publicity with the duties of general manager.

In almost every center parades will announce the opening of the season. Besides the exhibitors the principal producing and distributing companies will be represented by floats built in accordance with standard designs that the New York offices are sending to each exchange. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago and Salt Lake City are among the cities that will hold movie-balls.

Governors and mayors in many centers have given the season official recognition by proclamation; while the e tent to which business concerns generally desire representation in the drive is indicated by the donation of $100,000 in prizes by Chicago merchants for the Greater Movie Season newspaper contest there. Also in Chicago the amount of co-operative advertising is estimated at $500,000 over and above the $50,000 constituting the exhibitors' campaign fund. In localities where exhibitors showed an inclination to hang back there now appears a desire to get aboard the band-wagon as the drive reaches its peak, according to field reports.

Under present plans the Chicago parade will be an industrial exposition of local manufactures. The parade will be headed by the King and Queen of Movie Patrons, to be chosen by a popular voting contest from men and women living in Chicago.

Similar activities mark the New York campaign where Wells Hawks has appointed Bessie Mack of the Capitol and George Morris of the Piccadilly in charge of radio work; Terry Turner of Loew's and Edw. Olmstead of the Rialto, to look after parade organization; Fred Hamlin, of the Strand Theatre to assist in the advertising and Glen Allvine of the Criterion to control publicity. Other committees will be named later.

Through arrangements effected by the Hays office, the National Jewelers Publicity Association has linked that industry into the movement. Special bulletins from the Publicity Association have placed the plans fully before retail jewelers throughout the country and endorsed the drive as a business stimulant, thus paving the way for window displays and local prize donations for the newspaper contest.

Kalamazoo and Pontiac have embarked on vigorous campaigns under the leadership of H. L. Dean of the Orpheum Theatre, Kalamazoo, and A. J. Kleist of the Rialto, Pontiac.

A review of budgets forwarded from several centers to the Hays office shows that out of every $1,000 about $400 is being spent for newspaper space, $400 accessories while the balance of $200 meets contingent expenses, parades, billboard and posting costs. The sixteen-thousand stands donated by the Poster Advertising Association are being supplemented by a similar number purchased by exhibitor-committees, so that an unprecedented showing of approximately 32,000 boards will support Greater Movie Season nationally.

Supplementary exploitation that has gone to campaign managers includes newspaper contributions by Rex Beach, George Ade, Wallace Irwin, Rita Weiman, Temple Bailey, Richard Connell, Meredith Nicholson, John Emerson, Anita Loos, Elmer Davis, Terry Ramsaye and Emelia Wynne.

Particular interest attaches to Mr. Beach's description of his emotions on seeing his first story screened at a St. Louis nickelodeon, where "the room was darker than the inside of a cow and we fell over a drunken teamster who had parked near a cuspidor. He cursed a little and I had to ho'd my wife. A piano was being outraged by one of the proprietors; the other partner was engaged outside ballyhooing dimes. There was no smoking but a lot of spitting. Nobody saw us go in or come out of the place. For the mere use of the story I had received and squandered in riotous living the sum of one hundred dollars. How the producer could pay that amount and spend a dollar a foot to make the negative and still get anything out of it, was a mystery. It didn't look like a sound business."

Special Greater Movie Season numbers of the principal fan-magazines are concentrating their readers' interest upon August attractions;

Atlantic City, through Edward J. O'Keefe, its general chairman, has hurled the following defy at other cities:

"In view of the widespread interest among exhibitors in the forthcoming National Campaign in the interest of the Photoplay industry, the Motion Picture Theatre Manager of Atlantic City—"The World's Playground"—hereby issues a challenge to the bona fide managers of any other city or community in the country to equal the efforts of Atlantic City in the effectiveness of the Campaign.

"Atlantic City Theatres are 100 per cent back of the project. With nearly 3,000,000 visitors here from every section of the country, the theatres of this resort promise the most outstanding demonstration of the Nation. What we shall do is now secret. Is there any community of exhibitors in the country willing to accept our challenge. If so, write or wire, and:'you're on!'"

M. L. Coyne, special representative from the office of Will Hay's has been in Houston, Texas, for several days making arrangements with local theatre owners regarding Greater Movie Season which will open in Houston about the first of August.

Plans are going rapidly ahead to put Greater Movie Season over in first class style in Salt Lake, although it appears at the present time as if there will be but four theatres behind the move. These are the Paramount Empress, Victory, Kinema and Pantages houses. The other houses have signified their intention of not joining in the movement. However, the four actively interested have pooled their subscriptions and are going ahead to make a big thing of the event. Frank Becker has been appointed publicity director and has started the ball rolling.

Atlanta newspapers pledged full support to Greater Movie Season and placed every resource at their command at the disposal of the theatres included in the Greater Movie Season organization, following a visit to the managing editors of each paper on Monday, July 6th, paid by a committee headed by Willard C. Patterson. The managing editors visited were W. M. Baskerville, of the Georgian-American; John Paschal, of the Atlanta Journal; and Francis Clarke, of the Constitution. The committee from the Greater Movie Season organization included Earle Griggs, special exploitation manager for the Greater Movie Season; Matt Whitnam, of the Alamo No. 2 theatre; Sol Samuels, proprietor of the Alpha Theatre; Howard Waugh, manager of the Howard Theatre, and Thomas H. James, manager of Loew's Grand Theatre.

Referendum Bill on Daylight Saving Likely in New York

THe first step toward what may be the introduction of a bill in the New York State Legislature next January by Senator George R. Fearon, of Syracuse, authorizing a statewide referendum on the question of daylight saving was taken during the past week in Syracuse, when Senator Fearon was asked to sponsor a bill calling for a referendum applicable to Syracuse alone.

If the New York State M. P. T. O. shows sufficient interest to back a statewide bill, that will settle the question of daylight saving for New York state, making it uniform or else doing away with it entirely, there is no question but that Senator Fearon could be induced to introduce and get back of a bill of this sort.

In Syracuse, the common council of that city recently passed an ordinance favoring daylight saving over a certain given period, and which is now in effect. As the days have passed, it has cropped out that there is more opposition to the question of daylight saving than was first thought. It is believed that it would be better to let the voters of the city as a whole decide the question at a referendum, rather than to put the matter in the hands of a few men constituting the council.

130 Australia Theatres Merged

Big Consolidation of Antipodes Film Interests Enters the Production Field

THE merger of film interests operating in Australia and New Zealand, reported last month, involves a total of 130 theatres and the consolidated organizations will launch a film production enterprise on a large scale, according to recent reports reaching this country.

The theatres now controlled by the mergered companies comprise 100 in Australia and 30 in New Zealand, in addition to studio properties and equipment for making photoplays. These are the properties of Union Theatres and its associated Australian companies, Hayward's Pictures, Ltd., and New Zealand Picture Supplies, Ltd., and Fullers Theatres, Ltd., all of New Zealand.

The company has already started a big film production according to a statement issued by Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Union Theatres, who, in discussing this phase of the enterprise said:

"Production in New Zealand has already started. The current undertaking is an elaborate Maori war picture in which more than 8000 natives take part. Our plans for Australia are not so well defined, but there will certainly be increased activity here both as regards building and producing. It is proposed within the next four or five years to complete a chain of additional theatres in New Zealand."

The directors of the corporation are W. A. Gibson, O. B. E. who was recently in America, representing Australasian Films, Stuart F. Doyle, representing Union Theaters, Sir Benjamin Fuller, Henry Hayward, John Fuller, E. J. Righton, G. T. Balcombe and F. J. McDonald.

"Kine," London, current issue quotes E. R. Gourdeau of Australasian Films' London office, as saying that in addition to the countries mentioned the company has distributing offices and theatres in the Dutch East Indies and the Straits Settlements.

Conference On Copyright Bill

Woodhull and Cohen Offer Recommendations to Be Included in New Measure

NATIONAL President R. F. Woodhull and Sydney S. Cohen, Chairman of the Board of Directors represented the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the conference of the General Committee on the Copyright Revision Bill the Bar Association Bldg., 42 West 44th held Wednesday, July 8th, at 10 A. M. at Street, New York City, and arranged to file with the Sub Committee of the Patents Committee of the House of Representatives at Washington, recommendations to be incorporated into the new copyright bill which will be presented to the next Congress when it convenes in December 1925.

Two of the amendments to be urged are as follows:

"That when any author or composer or his or her administrator, executor, or assigns shall publish or cause to be published for sale to the public copies of any copyrighted musical composition or song, the sale of any such copy shall free the same from further contribution by the holder thereof, to the author or composer or his or her administrators, executors or assigns in case of public performances for profit."

Also an amendment was submitted that will prevent the pooling of copyrights or performing rights as is the practise now.

Other amendments and recommendations are being prepared at this time and will be included in those filed with the above Committee.

"Theatre owners in all parts of the Country are urged to get in touch with their Congressmen and United States Senators now," said the M. P. T. O. A. statement. "Many of their representatives are at home now and exhibitors should approach them as their Constituents, presenting the facts to them and asking that relief be afforded them. This direct communicating with their representatives in Congress is a most effective means of bringing to their attention the matters in which theatre owners are interested and in which they need relief.

"We also request that theatre owners send us on to National Headquarters any facts or information they may have that will be of help to us in the fight, together with any word or message they may receive from their Congressional representative."

"U" Earnings For First 6 Months Show Increase

Universal Pictures Co., Inc., reports net earnings of $1,071,000 for the six months ended May 6 last. This is an increase of 32 per cent over net earnings for the predecessor company for the first six months of 1924. The new company was organized on January 10, 1925

After deduction of preferred dividends, the balance was equivalent to $3.25 for the half year on the outstanding common stock.

The I. M. P. A. of A. committee consists of Oscar Neufeldt, De Luxe Films, Philadelphia; Jack Bellman, Renown Pictures, New York; and Joe Klein, Chesterfield Motion Pictures Corporation, New York. A conference between the two committees will be held in New York in the near future at a date to be decided upon.

A. H. Blank To Build Big Omaha House

Will Cost Million Dollars—Other Important Circuits Busy With New Theatre Projects

A MILLION dollar theatre, with restaurant and dance hall features, will be built in Omaha by A. H. Blank, in affiliation with the Balaban & Katz interests. Mr. Blank this week signed a ninety-nine year lease for a corner at Twentieth and Farnam streets, the total value of the lease being placed at $3,775,000. Work on the theatre will begin in 90 days.

The new theatre is to be the best in that part of the country, with seating capacity of 3,500, of Spanish design, with patios and fountains, and with no store or office rental space. A renaissance restaurant is to be a feature.

The Blank interests already operate the Strand and Rialto theatres in Omaha.

There have been rumors that the World Realty company and George Brandeis, head of Omaha's largest mercantile establishment, contemplate the erection of a motion picture theatre at Sixteenth and Douglas streets, at a cost of $1,000,000. If this deal should go through, it would involve tearing down the Empress theatre, now operated by the World Realty company. The World interests operate the World, Moon, Sun, Empress and Muse theatres here.

According to the announcement of William M. James, of Columbus, Ohio, president of the James Amusement Enterprises, neighborhood patrons in Columbus are to be served with three new James theaters.

At Main street and Berlekey road, the sum of $500,000 will be expended in erecting a new Eastern theater which will replace the one that is now located near that intersection and also take in the adjacent lot on the corner. This will seat 1600 persons.

The second neighborhood theatre will be erected at Parsons and Reinhard avenues and will also be of Spanish design. It will also accommodate 1600 persons. The third motion picture house will be built on the Hilltop on West Broad street.

The three new houses planned will bring the James string to eight. The construction of the two theatres already planned, the first two mentioned, is expected to start within 60 days.

In New York City Harry Blinderman, Charles Steiner, Samuel Friedman, Jack Schwartz and Herman Wissner have purchased outright the Harlem Grand, Stadium, Cosmo and several other Harlem theatres.

With their other theatres namely, the Regun, New 125th, Jewel and Harlem Fifth avenue this organization have one of the strongest booking combinations in upper New York city.

Ben Sherman, formerly owner of the newly acquired Blinderman-Steiner theatres, has affiliated with the new owners.

The additional theatres taken over by Harry Blinderman and his co-workers give the company one of the strongest booking combines in New York city. More than 14,000 seats is the joint seating capacity of the combine.

Messrs. Blinderman and Steiner also own and control six of the largest of the many East Side theatres and have in the course of construction four other downtown theatres among which will be the first Egyptian theatre ever built in New York.

Walter Reade has leased to Loew, the Astor Theatre property at Broadway and 45th St. Mr. Reade signed a ten year agreement with Loew's, Inc. with an option to renew of twenty-one years which will net Mr. Reade two million dollars on the first term of this leasehold.

The first attraction to play in this theatre will be "Ben Hur."

Representatives of the Paramount interests and the Keith-Albee Circuit were recently in Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Altoona, Allentown, Easton and Reading inspecting the houses that are concerned in the pending deal between Famous Players and Wilmer & Vincent. J. J. Murdock, H. B. Franklin and M. S. Goodman were among the executives who made the tour of inspection.

The expansion policy of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, has again come into Ottawa, the Canadian Capital, where the purchase has been made of a 132 foot frontage on Sparks Street, the main business thoroughfare, from Mrs. Margaret St. Denis for $225,000. This is adjacent to a 28 foot frontage which was bought by Famous Players some time ago and the newly-brought property lies exactly in front of a large site on which Famous Players started to build a big theatre several years ago.

The purchase of the new property on Sparks Street means that the area now under title to Famous Players for the theatre is approximately double the previously held site.

There is definite talk around Ottawa that Famous Players will build a huge theatre palace and that the policy of the new theatre will be to present a combination of photoplays and Pantages vaudeville. Harold Hitchinson of Toronto, supervisor of theatres for Famous Players, has been in Ottawa for some weeks but he has not made any statement regarding immediate plans.

Chicago Booking Combine Forming

Ascher Brothers, Cooney, Karzas and Coston in Buying Combination of Fifty Theatres

THE formation of a big booking combine in Chicago, as a direct result of and in opposition to the recent Balaban-Katz and Lubliner & Trinz combination, became known this week. Ascher Brothers, Cooney Brothers, Andrew Karzas and the Coston group of houses, comprising in all about fifty theatres, have signed a preliminary agreement for a combination booking organization, according to the Chicago correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, who says that the final papers will likely be signed.

A telegram to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from J. Cooney, President of the National Theatres Corp., says: "Report that this concern has consolidated or merged with any other theatre organization is positively groundless."

The best information is that the deal is a booking combine and does not involve change in ownership of any of the theatres mentioned.

According to Max Ascher, vice-president of Ascher Brothers, the new organization has not yet been named but probably will be called the Motion Picture Theatres Consolidated, and have its headquarters in Ascher Brothers' offices at 509 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

While the group of theatres affected does not include any loop houses, some of the theatres owned by the various signers of the agreement are of great importance in their neighborhoods, including as they do, Cooney Brothers' Capitol and three other large houses, Andrew Karzas' Woodlawn Theatre, the Robey, now under construction on the north side and which will be ready about October 1st, and his large new Hammond Theatre which is also being built; Ascher Brothers' entire chain of fourteen theatres, and the string of 63rd Street houses being booked by Jimmy Coston.

The combination starts with fifty houses all in Chicago and indications are that more than one hundred Chicago and nearby theatres will be affiliated with the new organization at an early date.

While details of the agreement are lacking, it is learned from authoritative sources that there will be no interchange of stock and the ownership of the various properties will not be affected for the present at least, but the organization will be supported by the theatres paying a percentage of the cost of film into the company's treasury.

"It is a move to protect and increase our buying power," Ascher said. "We now have fifty houses all in Chicago in the combination and expect by the end of the month to increase our control to at least one hundred and twenty-five houses." Ascher admitted that a combination of the Balaban and Katz and the Lubliner and Trinz interests made six weeks ago was in measure responsible for the new combination.

It is also understood that the agreement is binding upon the signers for three years.

Once the buying department is operating smoothly, the organization may branch out and include advertising, exploitation and production departments in its activities.

It is also learned that immediately upon hearing of the proposed organization, a number of additional exhibitors applied for membership and are under consideration by the advisory board.

It is reported that William Fox is very much interested in this combination and is prepared to back it up with capital if the members think it advisable.

Important Theatre Deals Now Being Negotiated In Europe

By L. C. MOEN
Staff correspondent of MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Paris, July 8.

DESPITE the general unwillingness of the European representatives of American companies to talk or to be quoted in print it can be authoratively stated that the next few weeks or months will see vital changes in the theatrical map of the continent, somewhat similar to those which have been going on in America in the way of producer ownership of theatres.

France in particular is ripe for the introduction of showmanship and better theatre operation not necessarily in the sense of American methods but in the matters of comfort, ventilation, lighting, programs, exploitations and general aggressiveness.

Someone is going to reap a rich harvest in this field and Paramount, First National and Metro-Goldwyn are each determined to be in on it. Offers are being made to local houses and circuits, sites are being considered for the erection of other theatres. Paramount is "in" the heaviest at the present time. Metro-Goldwyn has the Gaumont Houses under an agreement which has not yet been disclosed even in Paris.

First National it can be confidently stated will build in Paris as soon as a site can be decided upon.

The lines are forming for a battle royal. Money is being spent freely if not always wisely and it would not be surprising to see the complexion of film affairs in Europe altered radically in the near future.

Sign Colleen Moore Contract

First National Agreement Covers Three Years and Calls for Twelve Features

COLLEEN MOORE will star in twelve features to be made over a period of three years for First National, according to the terms of a contract signed last week by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, and John E. McCormick, husband of the star who will produce the pictures.

Immediately following the signing of the contract Miss Moore and her husband left for Los Angeles where the star will make the final scenes for "We Moderns," adapted from Israel Zangwell's play and her next First National release.

In signing the new contract for Colleen Moore pictures, all previous agreements were set aside. The salary to be received by the young star is not stated.

Commenting on the signing of the new contract, Mr. Rowland said: "Speaking for the directors of First National as well as myself, I cannot express too strongly our gratification at securing Colleen Moore for coming seasons. Colleen is the first daughter of First National's own productions and is now a star entirely unspoiled by success. It is a pleasure to be associated with her. We know from actual figures that Miss Moore is one of the topmost stars on the screen at the present time."

Before leaving for the Coast, Miss Moore said that she never felt happier in her life. "In all my motion picture experience, I never found a more inspiring man to work with than Mr. Rowland and I don't feel as though I ever want to be with any company other than First National."

Postal Rate Hearing Date Set

Woodhull Asks Exhibitor Statistics for Presentation Before Committee

U. S. SENATOR GEORGE H. MOSES, Chairman of the Special Committee considering the Postal Increase Bill to be presented to Congress next December, has informed R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A. that the committee will hear the objections of exhibitors against the proposed continuation of the increased mail rates in New York on August 3rd.

The M. P. T O. A. has issued a call to Theatre Owners to forward at once to the organization information as to the effect this advance in parcel post and mail costs has had on them in the operation of their theatres. Such statistics and data will be included in the brief which the M. P. T. O. A. will present before the Moses Committee at the hearing.

In requesting immediate action on the part of exhibitors in supplying this information the M. P. T. O. A. points out the importance of the matter to them and the fact that only a limited time is permitted the organization for the preparation of the case which it will place before the Committee.

The letter from Senator Moses in response to a letter written him by President Woodhull regarding the burden placed upon exhibitors by the increased postal rates, and requesting opportunity to present before the Committee the exhibitors' objections to the increased rates.

Brady in the chair, to establish a club centre for all independent exhibitors by opening club rooms in Toronto. This will be for the use of all local and out-of-town exhibitors who are members of the M. P. T. O. or who are in sympathy with the movement.

Skouras, Goldman Merge on Bookings

A BOOKING merger of considerable moment has been concluded in St. Louis by Skouras Brothers and William Goldman whereby the Skouras and Goldman first run houses will play day and date on some of the new season's biggest pictures. The number of pictures to be set in under the new arrangements has not been definitely determined as some contracts have not been concluded.

Spyros Skouras, president of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, confirmed the merger, saying that it was merely a booking arrangement and did not affect the ownership of the houses.

The Goldman houses affected are the Kings Theatre and Garden and the Rivoli. The Skouras houses are the Grand Central, West End Lyric, Lyric Skydome and the Capitol.

West Coast Theatre Deal Completed

Governing Board, With E. V. Richards Chairman, Formed—First National, Lesser and Gore Join Forces

FURTHER details of the West Coast theatre deal were learned this week. It is understood that First National, Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers have joined forces in the control of 60% of the stock of the big chain. The remaining 40%, representing the holdings of Adolph Ramish, has been sold to William Fox.

A governing board to control the First National - Lesser - Gore interest in West Coast has been created with E. V. Richards, Jr. as chairman. A voting trust has been formed, in which the controlling stock has been placed, for a period of ten years. Direct operation of the chain will be under the control of Mr. Lesser and the Gore Brothers.

With the major share of an $8,000,000 sale offer tendered to them, Lesser and the Gore Brothers decided to retain their interests.

This admission was made by the principals in explaining their refusal to consummate the deal after Adolph Ramish, associate owner of West Coast had disposed of his interest to Fox.

In their final breaking off of negotiations, Lesser and the Gores say they were persuaded by a storm of wired entreaties from exhibitors all over the country.

William R. Fraser, general manager Harold Lloyd Corporation, whose views on the importance of comedy will be found in the "Editor on Broadway" department.

New ownership arrangements will not affect the conduct of the West Coast chain along the course it has been following, say the controlling owners.

Sol Lesser and Abe Gore, who participated in the negotiations with the William Fox representatives in New York, both expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the deal. In a joint statement issued after announcement of the transfer by Adolph Ramish of his interest they said:

"We are more than happy to have as our partners William Fox and E. V. Richards, of First National. An alliance with the strength of these men and their organizations brings added strength into West Coast Theatres.

"We know that perfect harmony will continue to prevail through our new association, and that the expansion program to which we have been holding will go on with fresh stimulus. We regret, of course, the withdrawal of Adolph Ramish, whose support and counsel has been a great factor in forging the West Coast chain.

"You can say for us that we are glad we did not sell out, in spite of the tempting offers held out. The announcement that we planned to sell brought wires from exhibitors all over the country urging us to stick with them. The blood of the showman was in our veins, and we couldn't quit them."

Seider Sends Open Letter To Hays

On Behalf of M. P. T. O. A., Invites M. P. P. D. A. Head to Debate Film Boards and Arbitration Problem

JOSEPH M. SEIDER, Chairman of the Arbitration and Contract Committee of the M. P. T. O. A., this week invited Will H. Hays to debate "the existing contract, arbitration and Film Boards of Trade Problem." The invitation was sent out from National Headquarters of the M. P. T. O. A., in the form of an open letter to Mr. Hays.

Mr. Seider suggests that the debate be held at a time and place to be agreed upon, decision to be rendered by three United States or New York State Supreme Court Justices.

When the matter was called to the attention of Courtland Smith, secretary of the Hays organization, he said: "No comment to make."

The letter attacks the statement made by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Film Boards of Trade, to the effect that 95 per cent of the theatre owners are pleased with the present arbitration system. Mr. Pettijohn's statement, it will be recalled, was given to trade paper reporters at a recent Monday conference in the Hays offices.

Mr. Seider's letter follows:

"Hon Will H. Hays, President,

"Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America,

"469 Fifth Avenue,

"New York City, N. Y.

"My Dear Sir:

"The statement made by your office that 95 per cent of the theatre owners of America are pleased with your Film Boards of Trade and arbitration as practiced in this industry, is clearly disproved by the attitude of the theatre owners of America in refusing to ratify your contract at their Chicago Convention in 1923 and again at Milwaukee in 1925. At the latter convention a demonstration against the Film Boards of Trade, the contract and the arbitration system was made when these subjects were placed before the theatre owners.

"We are for arbitration. The arbitration system in our industry, however, controlled by your Boards of Trade, is not arbitration but litigation. It is a convenient collection agency for your members.

"The contract itself is inequitable. Predicated on a contract such as this, no arbitration system, no matter how honest, earnest and sincere the arbitrators may be, can be fair to the theatre owner.

"When a theatre owner becomes enmeshed in your arbitration system, he not only loses his right to trial by jury but also the possibility of having his matter reviewed by a court of competent jurisdiction. Instead of the award of the arbitration board being made a judgment of the Supreme Court, upon proper motion, and collectable through its legal officers, as provided by Law, the members of your Film Boards of Trade refuse to deliver pictures to exhibitor defendants. The exhibitor must either pay or close his theatre.

"The individual cannot take advantage of the protection afforded him by law. Injunctions are expensive. A review without injunction cannot be had because of the refusal of all the distributors at the same time refusing to deliver him pictures. And if he can protect himself, wherein is the benefit or advisability of arbitration?

"To be compelled to arbitrate after agreeing to do so is one thing. To be forced to sign a contract providing for arbitration is another. Where the theatre owner deletes the arbitration clause from his contract the contract is rejected. And every distributor at the same time does the same thing to the same theatre owner.

"We are pleading for a short, clear, fair contract, in simple language, so that all our members will know the extent of their obligations.

"We demand the right to appoint 50 per cent of the arbitrators instead of their being appointed for us.

"Since the Film Boards of Trade are the nucleus of the arbitration system, why not actually separate it from your organization? Then form a Film Board of Trade composed of Distributors and Exhibitors. Thus would the Arbitration Boards cease to be absolutely controlled by your organization.

"We did not refer this situation to the Department of Justice for Investigation. We believe that our interests in our industry are interlocked. For the protection of our Industry we must make every effort to ad-

Mastbaum Off to Europe to Sign Artists and Perfect Building Details

JULES E. MASTBAUM, president of the Stanley Company of America has sailed for Europe to remain several months for the purpose of signing up leading concert and opera artists of the world to appear in the Stanley houses. It is also understood that one of the big projects to be settled in France is the building of a modern theatre in Paris to cost $7,000,000.

This new theatre was discussed last year when Mastbaum was in Paris. Since then details have been perfected and these will be given Mastbaum's consideration. His associates urged last year that he make his residence in Paris to supervise the building of the theatre and the operation of it. Just how this detail has been settled has not been announced.

Just before sailing Mastbaum said:

"What we are especially eager to do is to bring to Stanley theatres the foremost artists of the music world. The public is eager to hear the best and we intend to give it. We believe that we will be able to convince such artists as Luisa Tetrazzini and Feodor Chaliapin, for instance, that a tour of Stanley houses will not in any way take from prestige but rather, will add to it. And it will not be a difficult matter to bring conviction. The Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia has already presented some of the world's greatest artists. Leopold Stokowski, the brilliant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, brought his entire organization to the Stanley Theatre to give a special concert. It was a tribute to Sanley's splendid work in the cause of music. Victor Herbert was guest conductor there on several occasions and he was always happy to appear at the house."

Radio Aiding Crandall Houses

Test of Broadcasting's Influence on Box Office Proves Scheme Profitable

THAT the radio concerts broadcast weekly from the Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., have stimulated box-office receipts at the houses operated by the company, is the declaration of officials of the organization after a series of tests to determine the value of "air advertising." The tests, designed to show first the extent of the audience reached by the broadcasting, and second the direct value to the box office, are declared by the Crandall offices to have clearly demonstrated that broadcasting is a substantial aid to the motion picture exhibitor.

Harry M. Crandall, owner of the fifteen theatres bearing his name in Washington, organized a broadcasting unit eighteen weeks ago. Known as "The Crandall Saturday Nighters," this unit sends concerts over the air every Saturday night through station WRC of the Radio Corporation of America. The programs, arranged by Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Crandall enterprises. Nelson B. Bell, advertising and publicity director, and Daniel Breeskin, musical director, present members of the musical organization serving the Crandall houses, augmented by specially engaged artists and a weekly screen star who speaks from station WJZ, New York, through WRC.

To determine the size of the audience addressed over the air and the popularity of the programs, the Crandall organization launched the scheme to offer a prize for the best name submitted for the new Crandall theatre now building at Georgia Avenue and Farragut St. N. W., in Washington. The offer of a prize of $100 for the best name was submitted over the air three Saturdays in succession. The response was overwhelming, the Crandall officials state. The number of names submitted totaled 42,754. The precise number of letters received, which was far in excess of this, was not recorded. The name finally selected was Crandall's Colony Theatre.

The test showing the value directly to the box office was made when Milton Sills spoke over the radio on the Saturday night before "As Man Desires," in which he is featured with Viola Dana, opened at the Metropolitan and Ambassador theatres. Both houses, it is asserted, did abnormal business with no other stimulus than the radio publicity.

Another indication that the box office is profitably served by these radio concerts is the fact that an unusual amount of oral comment is made by patrons during the week immediately following the broadcasting on the musical program, a portion of which is sent over the air on the Saturday evening preceding its presentation in the theatre, and so announced over the radio.

Recently the Crandall broadcasters asked the radio audience if the concerts should be continued during the summer or suspended until Fall. The response was so immediate and extensive in favor of a continuation of the broadcasting throughout the hot months that the management has decided to continue, being convinced that the effort and investment is a profitable one from the box office standpoint.

"Please permit me here to reiterate that the statements of your Mr. Pettijohn to the Department of Justice Agents that 95 per cent of Theatre Owners are satisfied with this situation has no foundation of fact.

"Most of the eighty writers of letters are arbitrators. Naturally a Judge feels that he decides fairly. And in a sense he does, the best way possible under existing conditions.

"Therefore, we respectfully offer to debate the existing contract, arbitration and Film Boards of Trade problem, with you personally, at time and place to be mutually agreed upon, decision to be rendered by three United States or State Supreme Court Justices on the merits.

Witmark Charges Use of Music in Suit

Alleged rendition of "That's How I Believe in You," by a pianist in the Grand Theatre, West Lafayette, Ohio, on November 4, 1922, has led to the filing of a suit in federal court at Columbus, Ohio, against George and Peter Revelis, owners of the theatre by M. Will Submit Briefs on Connecticut Tax

ARGUMENTS were heard last Friday in New Haven in connection with the new state tax law on films shipped into Connecticut. The law, which was to have become effective July 1st imposes a tax on all pictures shipped into the state. Its enforcement however, has been deferred until the present injunction suit terminates.

Arthur L. Shipman, special counsel for the state and George W. Wickersham, of New York, representing the Hays organization argued at length before the three judges sitting in the Federal court. They were given ten days in which to file briefs, after which the decision as to the constitutionality of the law will be given.

In his argument, Shipman admitted that possibly that portion of the law was unconstitutional which affected the shipment into Connecticut of films from other states.

Flinn Confers With Managers

Discusses Coming Release Program of Producers Distributing Corporation

JOHN C. FLINN, vice-president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation held his first meeting in Chicago last week with the eight new territorial division managers of the company. The meeting was called for the purpose of discussing the order in which the thirty-seven productions listed by Producers Distributing Corporation for the coming season will be released.

In addressing the managers Flinn sought their suggestions on the arrangement of the release schedule after carefully explaining the theme and locale of each of the subjects so far selected for the 1925-26 season.

In this regard Flinn said:

"The order in which productions are released should constitute a real program for the season that is as carefully worked out in its diversity as the daily program offered by a theatre. When we aim, as we do, to have our pictures booked and shown in consecutive order at the first run theatres, we must arrange our releasing schedule to present constant variety in theme, color and action.

"Our list of attractions includes every element of showmanship—Straight drama, straight comedy, melodrama, farce comedy, epics, allegories, spectacles and westerns, in just the right proportions to make a perfectly balanced whole.

"It was with the idea of offering a showmanlike program that we assembled our present group of subjects. Each picture is typical of the best in its class and the group as a whole represents the widest diversity possible to secure from the stage and the literary field.

"And when these pictures are arranged in their final order of release, they may be booked solid for consecutive showings with the absolute assurance of perfect balance."

Weekly Edition of Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

Productions listed are new pictures on which reports were not available previously.

For ratings on current and older releases see MOTION PICTURE NEWS—first issue of each month.

KEY—The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage rating of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

Trackless Train in Albany Enthusiastically Met

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York and Mayor Wm. S. Hackett of Albany boarded America's first Trackless Train when the special drove into Albany and toured the city as its guests through cheering throngs that crowded every sidewalk. The special, whose trip across the continent is being sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the interests of better roads and motion pictures, was received at the city limits by a motorcycle escort and drove first to the City Hall, where a committee of city officials, headed by the Mayor, welcomed and inspected it. The entire town turned out to view and admire the trackless transportation wonder.

Mayor Hackett boarded the train at the City Hall. The special then proceeded to the Capitol, where the Governor and members of his staff joined the Mayor's party. Stills and motion pictures were taken of the Mayor and the Governor on the observation platform and also of them individually in the cab of the train for the press.

Thousands of people recognized the officials on their tour about the principal streets, and cheered them wildly. Governor Smith, in high spirits, raised his hat repeatedly to the crowds, told them jocularly that he was off to California on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special, and on passing the New York Central station and the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Building informed the railroad officials that their days were over, as the Trackless Train had arrived to put them out of business by superseding the railroads. Letters to the Mayor of Los Angeles and to the Governor of California were entrusted to the Trackless Train by Governor Smith.

The train, on leaving the Governor and the Mayor at their respective offices, proceeded to the Leland theatre, where Mr. Buckley, one of the owners of the playhouse boarded it. At the Albany Walter Suckno joined him and at the Strand Manager Hill was picked up. Manager Wallace of Proctor's Grand theatre was called for and these exhibitors enjoyed a lengthy trip about the city.

The Trackless Train celebrated in Albany the completion of its tour of New England.

"Lilies of the Field" Well Advertised in Laredo

When Manager Jack Rowley of the Royal theatre at Laredo, Texas, began the exploitation work on "Lilies of the Field," he realized he had a valuable angle in the fact that Corinne Griffith is a Texas young woman. Besides running trailers in the Royal theatre several days in advance and placing numerous stands of pictures about the lobby of his theatre, with attractive lithographs on the walls, Manager Rowley two days before the opening distributed handbills and posted twenty-four sheet and smaller lithographs.

On the Saturday preceding the opening, an elaborate lobby showing of pictures in frames, stands of lithographs and other attractive displays were made, while on each side of the lobby entrance, in the panels, were frames of pictures and stands of lithographs, and in the central entrance of the lobby appeared an immense white lily with the head of Corinne Griffith as the centerpiece. This attractive display remained in evidence throughout Sunday and Monday, being augmented by the electric sign bearing the words, "Corinne Griffith in 'Lilies of the Field.'" The lily feature in the decoration attracted all passers-by, even those across the street.

Photoplay Page Aids Drive for "Learning to Love"

In exploiting "Learning to Love," Arthur Swanke, exploiter for the Rialto and Mission Theatres in El Dorado, Ark., obtained almost a free hand in arranging the picture page of the El Dorado Daily News. The picture was shown at the Mission theatre.

Swanke used a large banner, twenty feet long, by four feet high, across the front of the theatre for the engagement. The banner carried the name of the star and the picture.

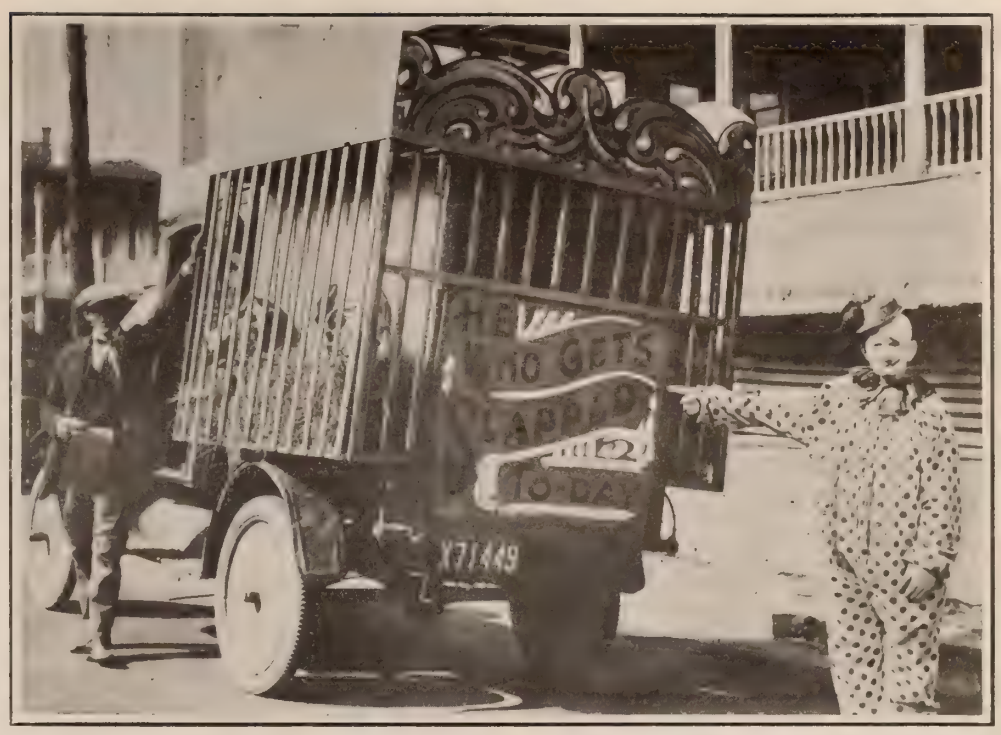
Manager H. C. Farley of the Strand theatre, Montgomery, arranged this lobby display for "Adventure" (Paramount) with cutouts on the sides and in center.

Varied Stunts Used for "Lost World"

One of the most complete and thorough campaigns that has ever been staged for the exploitation of any picture is a broad statement to make about the efforts of any exploitation work. However, in all justice, it can be said of the First National campaign for "The Lost World" at Atlantic City when that picture opened recently at the Globe Theatre.

Booked in with short notice, with only a few days to work before the opening, "The Lost World" was not lost in the boardwalk city—they found it—they couldn't help it.

Here is a summary of the work that was done:



A "Lost World" Lost Animal Contest was arranged with the Atlantic City Gazette-Review. For an entire week this paper ran daily photographs of "The Lost World's" prehistoric animals, with daily cash prizes to those who could give the correct names of the animals. A fifty-word essay about the animal determined the placing of the award and the stunt went over with a bang. Atlantic City laid aside its crossword puzzles and juggled with brontosaurus, allosaurus and the like. More than 2,000 replies being received by the paper.

A tie-up was arranged with the Yellow Taxi, the jitney buses, and the Packard Taxi Company, a total of more than 200 cars. Each car bore a two-foot sticker pasted on the rear windows reading, "Hop in and see 'The Lost World' now playing at the Globe Theatre."

So pleased was the Atlantic City Gazette-Review with the success of the contest which they carried that they distributed 12,000 "Lost World" rotogravure inserts in the Sunday edition of the paper.

Every book store location worthy of using was procured for full window tieups on the A. L. Burt edition of Sir Arthur Doyle's novel from which the picture was made.

The principal music store window was used to sell the picture and the song "The Lost World."

An effective ballyhoo used in connection with Metro-Goldwyn's "He Who Gets Slapped." This was part of the campaign devised by L. Love, Manager and J. Openshaw, Publicity director of Hunt's theatre, Wildwood, N. J.

The Majane News Company, the leading news dealer in Atlantic City, used 11,000 stickers advertising the picture in Yiddish. These were placed on the front page of every Jewish newspaper sold in the city.

In cooperation with the local organization of Boy Scouts, 15,000 special heralds were distributed to the homes.

Twenty-five of the best hotels were agreeable to placing special art cards in their lobbies in conspicuous locations.

Trailers were run in two principal picture houses advertising the attraction.

The campaign was under the guidance of Louis R. Brager, directed by Allan S. Glenn, Supervisor of Exploitation for First National.

Lobby display for "Recompense" (Warner Bros.) with large title sign and cutouts of the featured players.

M. G.-M. Trackless Train Sensation at Haverhill

America's first Trackless Train received an exceptionally enthusiastic welcome at Haverhill, Mass., on recently visiting this city in accordance with special instructions wired from Boston to New York by Louis B. Mayer, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executive, who got his start in the theatrical business at the Lafayette theatre in Haverhill. Enormous crowds turned out to greet the special, its arrival being celebrated by the appearance on the streets of the biggest crowds recorded since the visit of President Coolidge two years ago. Thousands of people lined the sidewalks as the train came into town escorted by four motorcycle police. Front page space was accorded by the press to its arrival, a cut and a three-quarters column being devoted to the event of the Haverhill Gazette.

The train began its tour of the principal streets at ten o'clock in the morning and, with representatives of the local theatres aboard, traveled to the former residence of Mr. Mayer on Hamilton avenue. Photographs of the home were taken there and then the locomotive went to the Lafayette theatre, where additional photographs were taken.

Bicycle Parade Utilized to Aid "Head Winds"

There was a National Bicycle week not so long ago. In Seattle, Wash., a parade of 2000 bike-riding boys was a feature of the celebration. Manager Robert Bender, of the Columbia theatre, who was showing "Head Winds" at the time, decided that the parade would not be complete without representation of the feature, and so he tied up with the men in charge.

As a result, two boys carried a large banner reading, "Heading for 'Head Winds' at the Columbia theatre. Join us in celebrating National Bicycle Week," in the center of the riding boys and the newspapers came through with a generous amount of publicity.

House to House Canvass on "The Fast Worker"

"Blanketing" a city the size of St. Louis in house-to-house distribution is no easy matter.

But Bill Goldman did it in exploiting Regianld Denny and Laura La Plante in "The Fast Worker" at the Kings and Rivoli.

In a campaign devised by Al Marks, his general manager; Maurice Davis, Universal exploiteer; and Will Foster of the National Dairy Association, Goldman got his advertising into 110,000 of St. Louis' 186,000 homes.

A four-page milk bottle hanger did it. In practically every home from which these theatres could expect patrons, these milk bottle hangers propagandized "The Fast Worker" its stars, its author, the theatre and the playdates. On its back was a coupon, which, with a slight admission fee, would admit an adult to any "Fast Worker" weekday matinee.

Half the cost of the hangers was paid by the National Dairy Association, which also paid half the newspaper display advertising costs and handled the hanger-distribution without charge. The Dairy Association's tie-up came in the fact that both Denny and Miss La Plante advocated milk as a food and tonic.

"Excuse Me" Well Put Over In Sandusky Campain

An excellent campaign on "Excuse Me" was recently waged by C. C. Deardourff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, in Sandusky, O., when this popular comedy played recently at the Schade theatre.

Special pennants attached to wooden standards were stuck up on the grass plots which line the main boulevard by permission of the city authorities, these pennants reading "'Excuse Me,' at the Schade theatre." These gaily colored pennants gave the boulevard a festive air and attracted enormous attention to the showing. Phone calls were made to all private residences, informing them of the showing, and "Excuse Me" cross word puzzles, taken from the exhibitor's service book, were planted in one of the local dailies with excellent results, proving extremely popular.

Jewelry stores, hat stores, sporting goods shops and a drug store contributed window displays to the cause,

Manager Guy O. Kenimer of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, used this book store tie-up for the showing of "Madame Sans Gene" (Paramount).

"The Crackerjack" Showing Aided by Ballyhoos

New York's attention was vividly called to the Mark Strand showing of "The Crackerjack" by the use of two distinct ballyhoo vehicles which paraded around the Times Square and uptown sections a week previous to the opening of the picture and during the week of the showing.

The exact pickle wagon used in "The Crackerjack" was rushed into duty around New York City and in conjunction with an ingeniously made automobile whose body and parts were made from an aeroplane by a U. S. Army Sergeant, distributed crackerjack candy in front of the New York Mark Strand theatre twice daily. The same ballyhoo was used at the Brooklyn Mark Strand when "The Crackerjack" opened there. The complete exploitation stunt was in the hands of D. E. Weshner, director of advertising and publicity for C. C. Burr's East Coast Films, Inc.

'Mechanical Doll' Boosts "New Toys" Engagement

"New Toys" was given a comprehensive campaign of explotation by the Saenger Amusement company at the Liberty theatre, New Orleans, where it played.

Departing from the usual, the Saenger firm employed La Rue, the vaudeville Mechanical Doll, to do daily street stunts. La Rue by cleverly contracting his muscles, facial and otherwise, gives a close-up exhibition of the oldtime mechanical doll.

He went on shopping tours, sold newspapers, worked in downtown show windows of big department stores, drove an automobile in rush traffic hours; all tied up directly and indirectly with "New Toys."

Window display arranged by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. for "The Lost World" (First National) when that picture played the Hyperion theatre, New Haven.

Elaborate "Excuse Me" Ads Effective in Nashville

Loew's Vendome theatre in Nashville, Tenn., recently had a vigorous and elaborate campaign waged in connection with the showing of "Excuse Me" by C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, and Manager Fain, of the Vendome.

A miniature electric train was set going in the lobby one week in advance of the run on a hill side setting completely equipped with railroad signals, stations and a miniature city. The train, consisting of locomotive with tender and three Pullmans, was labeled the "'Excuse Me' Special," while points along the track bore captions reading "Cupidville: No change Here," "Spoonieville: Keep Going," "Jazztown: don't park" and "Loversville: don't linger." These signs attracted vast attention. A small bill board on the hill side read: "Take a Pullman Joy Ride With Norma Shearer and Conrad Nagel on the 'Excuse Me' Special, Which Leaves Loew's Vendome Daily at 11 A.M. All Next Week." Time tables of all railroads having terminals in the city were placed around this set.

Seven thousand Pullman ticket heralds were mailed out to a selected mailing list and distributed among railroad employees, each ticket carrying a coupon good for one admission with each paid ticket.

The entire lobby was made over to represent a railroad station, and the entrance to the auditorium represented the end of a Pullman car. Pullman gates, railroad signals and lanterns supplied atmosphere.

Lobby display for "Charley's Aunt" (Prod. Dist. Corp.) built and set up by Jack McBride of the Circle theatre, Cleveland.

Ten thousand teaser door knob hangers were hung on door knobs all over the city, bearing the words "Excuse Me" and the date of the opening.

Five thousand auto hangers similarly printed were attached to radiator caps on parked autos throughout Nashville, and 8,000 heralds were distributed with the Sunday papers. In addition the town was lavishly posted.

British Exhibitor's Novel "Sea Hawk" Publicity

Pirates raided a ballroom which adjoins the Queens Hall Cinema, Hexham, England, and climbing into their awaiting bark at the end of the hall, proceeded to stalk the quarter deck, armed to the teeth with saxophones, cornets and drums, discoursing sweet music to the dancers below.

Tom H. Scott, the enterprising British exhibitor, was responsible for this stunt. Effective as it appeared, the vessel was merely painted on flat canvass. With a few deft touches the artist gave it a thoroughly ship shape appearance, adding a few frowning cannon by way of realism. Another piece of canvas, and a mast, from which the "jolly Roger" was flown, was erected in the middle of the bandstand to complete the picture.

"The Dixie Handicap" Sold With Miniature Race Track

The biggest factor in Manager Roy S. Smart's campaign on "The Dixie Handicap" at the Noble, Anniston, was the miniature race track constructed on a stage across the 25 ft. lobby of the Savoy Theatre, temporarily closed. This display was made up of cutout horses, fences and all the paraphernalia coincident with a racing course. The same kind of pennants and banners were used as decorated the Festival display at the Noble. Illuminated at night by a row of concealed footlights, this exhibit proved a real attention getter.

Excellent lobby display built for "Sally" (First National) when that picture played at the Royal theatre, Laredo, Texas.

The Metropole theatre, Dublin, Ireland, devised this ballyhoo stunt for "So Big" (First National).

Well Planned Campaign for "Idle Tongues"

Manager Wallace of the Fifth Avenue theatre, Nashville, Tenn., gave "Idle Tongues" a well carried out exploitation campaign.

A week in advance, a film trailer and slide were used in his theatre and both of his lobbies were covered with the various styles of posters prepared for this production. The frames in the lobbies and along the stairway of the family circle carried posters and photographs.

The billing campaign was considerably increased and paper was placed in the outskirts of Nashville as well as the business sections of the city. Two hundred fifty window cards were placed and heralds distributed. Two large beaver board cut-outs from the posters were used in the outer lobby.

A tie-up was made by W. R. Arnold, exploiteer with the Packard Company, Nashville agents for the Oakland car, through E. Gray Smith, manager, by which one of the new model Oakland cars was sent over the city carrying a card advertising both the car and "Idle Tongues." Arnold also effected a tie-up with Carl Howe, manager of the Howe's Distilled Water company, by which one of its trucks was sent over the streets carrying banners advertising the distilled water and the showing of "Idle Tongues" at the Fifth Avenue theatre.

"Coming Through" Display Visualizes Title

Manager J. P. Harrison devised a lobby display on "Coming Through" at the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, that established the atmosphere of the picture and the title in good shape. The lobby of the Hippodrome was entirely encased in beaver board, cut out and painted to represent the entrance to a mine shaft. The greens, natural rocks, picks and shovels, added a realistic touch to the exhibit. The cut-out title above the entrance was illuminated and attached to a flasher. Directly in back of the entrance, in the center of the lobby, was an appropriately framed scene from the photoplay, decorated with greens and natural rocks.

The lighting effect used on the display did much to enhance its attraction value. All lobby lights were red; red lanterns were placed in front of the theatre and red danger signals along the edge of the sidewalk. This produced a very striking effect.

The 36 window cards with inserts of 11 x 14 photos in a special background card, placed in windows and on soda fountains, proved a most productive investment in the way of publicity for the attraction.

Attractive Display Tie-up Exploits "Any Woman"

From a publicity standpoint, window displays played a prominent role in Manager F. J. Miller's standard campaign on "Any Woman," playing the Modjeska, Augusta. Four prominent windows were secured, three days in advance of opening, all of which had attractive displays of gowns and women's wearing apparel in general. In these windows were placed 8 x 10 still boards with wording tying up with the title, such as:

"Any Woman" would be delighted to own one of these gowns. Don't fail to see Alice Terry in "Any Woman" at the Modjeska, Thurs. Fri. and Sat.

In a shadow box built underneath the theatre marquee, was a display showing Alice Terry in a bathing suit, strikingly outlined against a painted background depicting a typical seashore scene. Illuminated by colored lights, the exhibit was extremely effective.

"Sally" at Warfield Given Drug Company Tie-up

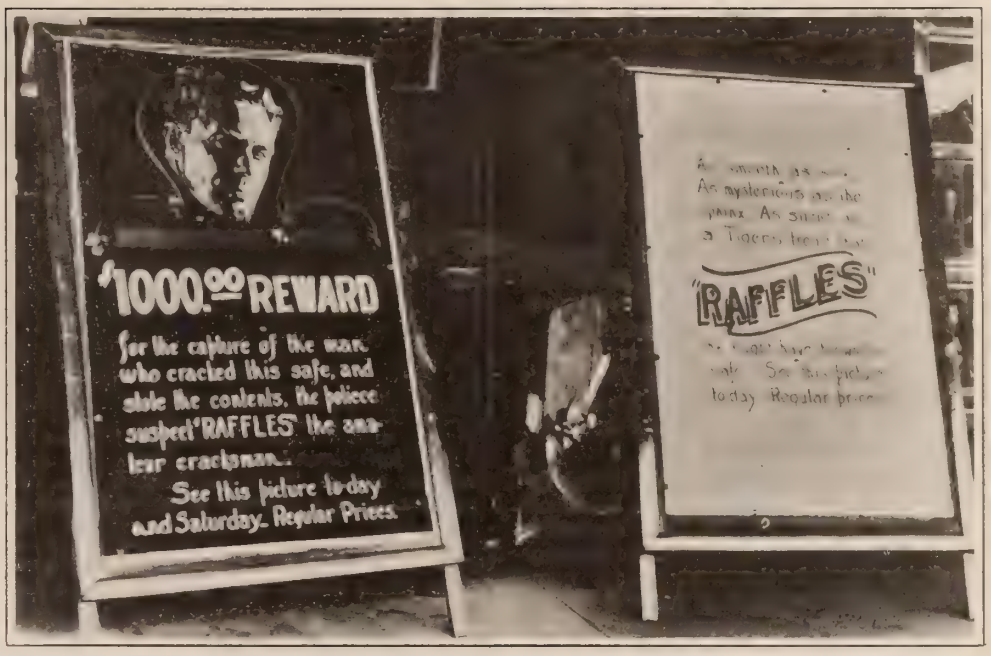
The Owl Drug company, which makes a specialty of the line of Colleen Moore toilet articles on the Pacific Coast, helped exploit that star's picture, "Sally," at Loew's Warfield theatre in San Francisco.

Fred A. Gross, director of displays for the San Francisco branch of the Owl Drug company, prepared and had put into the company's stores an altogether exceptional window display. The name of the new picture and the portraits of the star dominated the displays.

A dozen specially designed cards, carrying portraits of Miss Moore of stills from "Sally," nearly filled the windows. Samples of the various Colleen Moore toilet articles were displayed between the cards. The display was the centre of much interest, particularly on the part of women.

Atmospheric prologue presentation put on at the Howard theatre during the showing of "East of Suez" (Paramount) with vocalist in the foreground.

"The Lady" is Advertised With Music Week Bill



"The Lady" with Norma Talmadge, was the feature film which played the Palace theatre during "National Music Week." Manager Howard Waugh advertised both the production and special musical program through the usual channels, with direct appeal to all local music teachers, singers, clubs, etc. In addition, 10,000 special booklets were gotten out by Bry's Department Store, featuring "National Music Week" with special mention of "The Lady." The back page tied-in Victor Victrolas with "Music Week." 5,000 of these pamphlets were distributed by a local laundry, one being enclosed with each bundle. The remaining number were distributed at the theatre and Bry's, with most gratifying results.

A tie-up of great importance was effected with nine of Memphis' leading music stores, whereby a cooperative page was run in the Scimitar. Besides, each shop had an attractive window display on the attraction, with special cards announcing "Music Week" at the Palace.

Manager Waugh arranged a splendid tie-up with the Piggly Wiggly Store for the distribution of 15,000 Cross-Word Puzzle Folders on "The Lady. This was accomplished by wrapping one up with each loaf of Piggly Wiggly Bread. The folder contained a Cross-Word Puzzle Contest with award as follows: To the first fifty ladies presenting the correct solution at the Palace Box Office at 11 o'clock on opening day, a free admission would be issued for that performance. The front page of folder was devoted to advertising copy on "The Lady" and "Music Week," while half of the back page carried the Pigg'y Wiggly Store's advertisement of their Pound Cake. The contest was an excellent publicity builder, both for the theatre and store.

A feature of the week's program was a beautiful prologue especially arranged by Dave Love, musical director of the Palace. The leading man of the local stock company, which closed recently, was engaged for the occasion, and his appearance brought many of the stock company's regular patrons into the Palace.

The regular newspaper advertising was augmented by special stories in all local newspapers on "Music Week." Also had a 30-inch tie-up ad in the Roto Section of the Commercial Appeal with the Plough Chemical Company.

Singing Newsies Prologue to "Sally" Presentation

Frank Holland, manager of the Victory theatre, Evansville, Ind., used singing newsboys in a prologue for "Sally," and received splendid encomiums from his patrons.

Against a street drop, he introduced half a dozen newsboys shooting craps, a policeman, an older boy and a girl dressed to represent Miss Moore as Sally.

Intriguing Folder Boosts "Confessions of a Queen"

Interest in "Confessions of a Queen" was effectively aroused in Los Angeles when this production played recently at Loew's State theatre by the distribution of 10,000 heralds made up in folder form, the front page of which showed a diary conspicuously lettered "Confessions of a Queen." H. W. Lawrance, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, made up and distributed these folder heralds.

On the first inside page was written under the date May 24: "Today was my wedding day. I am now Queen of Illyria. Christian does not love me. Of that I am sure. I am just his queen—not his wife. I have heard rumors already of another woman—perhaps several. I wonder if any other bride was every as miserable as I upon this my wedding night. Other women can be unhappy, but a queen must hold her head high."

On the second inside page appeared another entry dated July 18. "Alexi loves me," it read. "He told me tonight. God help me, but I love him. The king has his sweetheart. Why can't I have my lover? Must I be denied a woman's heritage of love just because I wear a crown? Must I sacrifice everything on the pitiless altar of stage? The prime minister hints that there should be an heir to the throne. Oh, what shall I do!—what shall I do!"

On the back page appeared several captions, such as "Under the Royal Robes—Just Plain Folks," and "The Veil Hiding the Private Life of Modern Royalty is Lifted in 'Confessions of a Queen'."

Window display arranged by Ray Abegglen of the Columbia and Ideal theatres, Alliance, for "The Thief of Bagdad" (United Artists).

Window Displays Feature Campaign on 'Prairie Wife'

A window display featuring tobaccos and pipes and another featuring candy recently helped exploit a showing of "The Prairie Wife" at the Lyric Theatre in Connorsville, Ind. Charles Glickauf, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, supplemented these exhibits with an active press campaign. Slides were used in the theatre and there was a special lobby display.

Weil Gives "Smouldering Fires" Excellent Campaign

While the people along New York's White Way were still talking about Universal's, "Oh Doctor:" Carl Laemmle sent another White List Jewel, "Smouldering Fires," on its way to the screen of Lee Och's beautiful Piccadilly Theatre.

"Smouldering Fires," starring Pauling Frederick and Laura La Plante, was booked into the Piccadilly for a single week but the critics and a well planned exploitation campaign helped boost the box-office receipts to such a figure during the first week that Lee Ochs used his good judgment and moved back his schedule of other bookings to make way for a second week.

The exploitation campaign conducted by Joe Weil, Big U exploiteer, was based on two points. Although Pauline Frederick had not been absent from the screen for any appreciable period, there was great news interest in announcing her "return to the screen" and so this angle was played up to the utmost. Critics on the various papers were advised by carefully worded personal notes to pay particular attention to Miss Frederick's work in this picture and they were challenged to pick another screen star who would "dare" to portray the role Miss Frederick characterized in the picture.

A special flashy two color yellow and black half sheet card was sniped about the city as the opener of the campaign ten days before the showing. This was tied up with a big showing of half-sheet block paper announcing "The Best Picture on Broadway This Week!"

Three days in advance of the showing two very pretty girls dressed in Pierrot costumes of a vivid red hue, with hearts and dollar signs sewed on, and high conical hats, were sent out on the busy shopping thoroughfares to ballyhoo the picture. They distributed special teazer heralds prepared by Weil to shock the receipients at first glance. In bold letters on both sides of the folded paper were the words:

Warning!
Let no man be necessary
to you!

Special copy was writtten to attract business women and girl's to the Piccadilly as "Smouldering Fires" is a story about a business woman. Teazer copy for this purpose was boiled down to post card space and 5,000 milliners, public stenographers, manicurists were circularized.

Browning Ties Up to Union to Aid "Quo Vadis"

In order to get "Quo Vadis" properly before his public, Manager H. ("Tod") Browning of the Olympia theatre, New Haven, effected a tie-up with the New Haven Union.

Through its tie-up, Philip Troup, editor and publisher of the newspaper, issued 2,000 letters of invitation to a preview showing of "Quo Vadis" at the Olympia. The newspaper furnished both the letterheads and the envelopes and Troup personally signed each letter.

These invitations were sent to all school teachers in New Haven, heads of the various Italian fraternities, to all Yale university professors and to all of the most prominent Italian citizens in New Haven.

The letter of invitation sent out by Troup, announced that the New Haven Union had arranged with Browning for an invitation performance and told something about the new film version of Sienkiewicz's novel.

Flashing Lamps Herald Run of "If I Marry Again"

Frank Steffy, manager of the Coliseum, Seattle, made the title of "If I Marry Again," stand out through the use of a flashing border of electric lamps on each side of the corner entrance to his theatre.

The lobby was done in a sponge process which was very attractive on account of its color combination. He used cut-outs in the shadowbox, illuminated at night so that they stood out prominently.

Attractive lobby display given "Learning to Love" (First National) by Manager, Frank Steffy, Coliseum theatre, Seattue.

Rowley Meets Opposition "Show" on "Lincoln"

Every manager has an obstacle of some kind to overcome at intervals during his career as a showman, and in each section of the country these obstacles are of various kinds. Manager Jack Rowley of the Royal theatre at Laredo, Texas, had booked "Abraham Lincoln," for his theatre, but in doing so he did not take cognizance of the fact that in beginning its three-day engagement he was "butting in" on Mexico's big celebration day, for the "Cinco de Mayo," as the fifth of May is better known, marks the victory of the Mexicans under General Zaragoxa over the French in Pueblo, and this event is celebrated not only in Mexico, but all along the border.

Manager Rowley billed the city with lithographs of all sizes, following the running of trailers and slides and the placing of stands of pictures and lithographs. He issued an invitation to twenty-five of the motion picture critics, ministers and educators of the city of Laredo.

After having viewed the picture at the private showing, the "critics" endorsed the film as "a picture that every red-blooded American in Laredo should see—a picture that gave a true insight into the life of the greatest American, his life's work, his romances, his rise to power and other facts that every American should know."

This was the endorsement that Manager Rowley wanted, and those who attended the private showing of the picture five days ahead of its opening engagement at the Royal theatre proved the best "walking advertisements" that could be obtained.

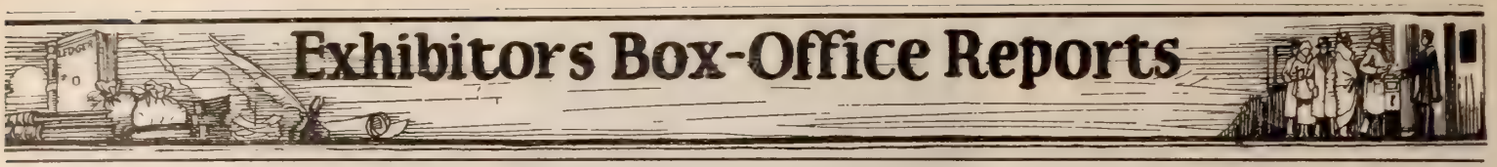
Novel display board used in connection with the showing of "The Night Club" (Paramount) by Manager H. P. Kingsmore of the Howard theatre, Atlanta.

Manager Rowley converted the front of the Royal theatre into a veritable patriotic front, placing a large portrait of Lincoln in the central entrance, suspended from the top of the doorway, decorated this with flag bunting and then extended flag bunting garlands from the picture over all the front entrances of the building, put the words "Romance of Abraham Lincoln" in electric lights under the marquesette, arranged stands of lithos and pictures in the doorways and the outer panels, hung banners at each end of the marquesette. This "front" attracted attention from everybody who passed in the vicinity of the Royal theatre.

Good Use Made of Paper on "A Thief in Paradise"

The management of Loew's Vendome theatre, Nashville, made free use of the paper and accessories prepared for "A Thief in Paradise" when that picture was shown. Five hundred sheets of paper were put up, 1000 window cards placed and 3,000 heralds distributed, in addition to half-sheets hung on street cars and the free use of the posters in the lobby display.

Exploiteer W. R. Arnold, tied up with the Standard Music company for a window displaying the song, "A Thief in Paradise," along with a still and a card announcing the showing of the film. He obtained window displays with the Cain-Sloan Dry Goods company and with the Joe Morse Clothing company. The Cain-Sloan display consisted of bathing suits and a large card, containing a picture of one of the polo girls in one-piece bathing suit with the statement that the particular brand of bathing suit shown in the window was worn by the polo girls in the making of the picture.



"Man and Maid" Given Four Live Widow Displays

"Man and Maid" was recently aided at the Tower theatre in St. Paul, Minn., by Morris Abrams, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, who made four elaborate window displays a features of his campaign. The town was lavishly posted, fifteen 24-sheets being exhibited among other sheets of various sizes. Extra space was taken in all the local dailies, a teaser campaign in this instance proving exceptionally effective.

A trailer was used at the Tower theatre and there was a special lobby display of cut-outs.

An armored express car was used to carry a print of "The Phantom of the Opera" (Universal) from the offices of Universal in New York to the ship which was to carry it to Europe.

The exhibitors' box office reports which follow are from theatre owners who reside in the smaller towns. Names of the contributors are omitted by agreement in accordance with the wishes of the average exhibitor and in the belief that reports published over the signature of the exhibitor reporting, is a dangerous practice.

Only reports received on specially prepared blanks furnished by us will be accepted for use in this department. Exhibitors who value this reporting service are urged to ask for these blanks.

Christie Makes Additions to Stock Company

Yola D'Avril, French Dancer, and Stella Doyle, English musical comedy singer and dancer, have been added to the Christie studio stock company, now making a series of new releases to be distributed through Educational Film Exchanges.

Miss D'Avril is a protege of Gloria Swanson and appeared with her in "Madame Sans Gene." Miss Doyle has won success on the London stage and has appeared in a few pictures in England.

Fred Peters, a six-foot-four "heavy" comedian is another late addition to the stock company. Other supporting comedians recently placed under contract include Bill Irving, Eddie Baker, Bill Blaisdell and Lincoln Plumer.

Sennett is Featuring Joseph Young and Ruth Taylor

Two comparative newcomers to the screen will have the featured roles in "Dangerous Curves Behind," a Mack Sennett two-reel comedy soon to be offered by Pathe. The players who essay the principal roles in this film directed by Del Lord are Ruth Taylor and Joseph Young.

Gil Pratt, recently added to the Sennett directorial staff, has started a new two-reeler in which Ralph Graves will be starred.

Rosalie Marlin in "Peggy the Vamp," first of the "Sheiks and Shebas" series for Davis Distributing Division.

Lige Conley in scenes from "Below Zero," his new Educational-Mermaid Comedy directed by Norman Taurog.

Big List Of "Shorts" From Fox

Company is Prepared for Most Important Year for Brief Comedies, Dramas and Novelties

ONE of the big production organizations which have planned an extensive short subjects program on the belief that the coming year will see the shorts in a more important position than at any period hitherto is the Fox Film Corporation, whose announcement for the coming season includes an imposing list of comedies and novelties in one and two reel length.

Prominent among the comedy and short story series which Fox has prepared to film are the O. Henry stories, the "Helen and Warren" newspaper features, written by Mabel Herbert Urner, and the new group of "Van Bibber" stories taken from the writings of Richard Harding Davis. All of these groups will be filmed in two reel length.

In addition to acquiring the very best material with which to make the short reel films the Fox Company has created a new short subject production unit which will function under the supervision of George B. Marshall.

The Marshall unit will be divided into four companies. One will continue making the Van Bibber successes under the direction of Robert Kerr, another under the direction of J. G. Blystone will adapt to the screen the Urner Stories, a third will make the Imperial Comedies, with such directors as Lew Seiler, Ben Stoloff, Bryan Foy, while the other, under the direction of Daniel Keefe, will bring to the screen the humor and pathos of the master O. Henry.

Under a new production head every preparation has been made to assure that the twenty-six Fox Varieties to be released during the coming season will be worthy of the highest class theatres. Ray Hall is the new director of the Varieties unit and his long experience in the short subject field places him at the head of the list as regarding judgment of what is one-reel entertainment material.

At the present time Mr. Hall has five expeditions penetrating hitherto unexplored regions in search of the unique and unusual for Varieties short subjects. These travelers are under the guidance of some of the best known researchers and explorers.

Truman Talley is continued as director-in-chief of Fox News with an editorial staff that has proven its worth in all sorts of emergencies. Additions to the camera staff of Fox Varieties and Fox News have given these units protection at every strategic point in the world, the near and the far being covered with the same thoroughness.

Short Subjects Drives Under Way In Many Cities

Moves To Interest Press In "Featurettes"

A CO-OPERATIVE drive by first run theatres that is developing into the greatest exploitation ever put across on Short Subjects is under way in a number of key cities following a remarkable session held recently in Philadelphia between the Stanley Company of America representatives and the Philadelphia newspaper critics.

Quick to see the advantages of getting the newspaper reviewers more interested in Short Subject reviews, first run managers and publicity men in a number of other cities have adopted the Philadelphia idea and have held or are planning to hold similar meetings with their newspaper representative to pledge their co-operation in giving Short Subjects a better break in the news and review columns of the newspapers.

Nothing that has taken place before has demonstrated so clearly the growing importance of the briefer pictures in the making up of diversified programs and in building up greater box-office appeal.

Slightly over two weeks ago the publicity office of the Stanley Company of America, represented by Abe L. Einstein, Director of Advertising and Publicity, invited the motion picture editors of all the Philadelphia newspapers to a luncheon at which they were informed of the great strides made in recent months by Short Subjects and frankly asked for their opinion on treatment that should be given to these one and two-reel subjects by the press. The ensuing discussion revealed the fact that the newspaper editors were unanimous in believing that the Short Subject often saved the show, that the quality Short Subject always added a great deal of extra appeal to the program and that the public, being vitally interested in these pictures, was entitled to more information about them through the columns of the daily newspapers.

"Many a poor feature picture has been saved from disaster by reason of surrounding attractions at a cinema house," said Herman L. Dieck in the Philadelphia Record in announcing the new newspaper policy as to Short Subjects.

"Local exhibitors are much interested in the plan to build up interest in every part of a motion picture program. It is recognized that there are many astute patrons of picture shows who take into consideration the entire make-up of a bill and who gauge patronage accordingly. But less informed individuals are likely to be attracted only by the name of a feature picture and by the roster of announced players. If it can come to pass that the short subject may also be a lodestone, an ideal for exploitation will have been attained.

Quality of Films Improved

"For a long time producers of the short subject were seemingly content to 'go along.' Then there was presented 'The Voice of the Nightingale.' It was just another short subject. But 'The Philadelphia Record' called attention to the high quality of that production not only in a review but also in an editorial. The makers of the picture at once realized that there was a great field of motion picture activity that was not sufficiently appreciated. It was an encouragement and an incentive. If one short film could be so worthy as to bring the highest praise, other 'featurettes' might also be deemed worthy. So at once a movement began. It was for such pictures of short length as should in every way compare favorably with the long feature. The producers were alert and a new era seemed at hand. There should be such short subjects as would be a credit to any maker of films. And now that movement has gained impetus. The day of the short subject is dawning. It is to be a 'featurette' not only in name but in actuality."

"Enquirer" Endorses Plan

In the Philadelphia Inquirer "The Call Boy" outlines the new treatment of Short Subjects as follows:

"It begins to look as though the short subject pictures are about to receive the attention from exhibitors and producers that they are entitled to. A well-attended meeting of the prominent film people of the city was held on Thursday at which it was generally expressed that one and two-reel pictures are entitled to as much—and in many instances to greater prominence—than the so-called 'feature' subjects. I have maintained for a long time that the short films have more real value than the average long ones, because the former are to a greater extent of an educational quality, representing as they do the activities of the people throughout the entire civilized world."

First run showmen in all these towns of course realize that to keep up this greater newspaper interest in Short Subjects they must treat their Short Subjects with similar respect and interest and all have undertaken to pay greater attention to the briefer pictures in their own ad layouts. Altogether the series of meetings that have sprung up so quickly since the Philadelphia luncheon stand as the most noteworthy exploitation work done in connection with Short Subjects in years.

O. W. Hanson, manager of the local Pathe exchange invited managers of all the local agencies distributing short subjects, to a banquet at the Hotel Wolverine last Monday evening, July 13. Cinema exhibitors and photoplay editors of the local papers were also invited. The value of the short subject as a programme feature was the chief topic of conversation.

Praises "News" Campaign

Hanson declared that the short feature has grown phenomenally in recent months as a method of entertainment and was now a component part of every good programme. Hanson also called upon exhibitors to place more stress upon the short subjects in their advertisements declaring that such a policy would attract more patronage. Plans were drawn at the meeting for a local campaign which will be held in conjunction with national organizations. He called attention to the campaign being waged by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, citing the course taken by this publication as being a most noteworthy one, in the acquainting of the nation with the value of comedies, newsreels and educational features.

Since the result of this Philadelphia meeting reflected so forcefully the great public interest in Short Subjects, first run showmen in at least a half dozen other large exchange cities have held similar meetings with newspaper representatives with similar results and the work has even been carried into smaller key centers, such as Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where the first run houses have all undertaken to cover Short Subjects adequately in their advertising and where newspaper men have promised to give them equally adequate attention in their reviews.

Launch Drive in Detroit

In Detroit a meeting was arranged to be held within the last few days at which the Washington Theatre, the Broadway Strand and the general representative of the Kunsky Enterprises were to be hosts to the newspaper critics. The keen interest taken by first run showmen in this city guaranteed beforehand the favorable results of this meeting.

In Cincinnati a very successful luncheon meeting was held with the newspaper critics and the reviewers agreed hereafter to give special attention in their reviews to Short Subjects of merit. As the preview practice is in force in Cincinnati and most feature pictures are screened for critics ahead of the theatre opening date, arrangements were made to preview all Short Subjects with the features. Within the last two days meetings of this nature have also been held in Indianapolis, Washington and Omaha, but detals of the results have not yet been received. A get-together meeting between the St. Louis first run theatre men and newspaper critics has been called and the preparatory work for such a session is under way in Boston.

Touring Europe for Kinograms

Editor of News Reel Will Add to Camera Staff in Foreign Countries

FOREST IZARD, managing editor of Kinograms, the news reel distributed by Educational Film Exchanges, sailed last week for an extended tour of Europe where he will establish new connections for the organization and engage additional camera men to supply material of world events for the topical film. Mr. Izard may extend his voyage to take in Asia, India and the Orient should such a move prove necessary to accomplish the expansion work on which he is now engaged.

E. W. Hammons, President of Educational, expressed himself as being most enthusiastic over Mr. Izard's plans.

"Mr. Izard's trip should prove of immense benefit to exhibitors," said Mr. Hammons, "for it means that Kinograms within a short time will have the greatest assembly of news cameramen in the world. Its domestic staff is now, I believe, all that could be desired both numerically and for ability. Events in foreign countries, however, have come to be more and more important in a news reel, so that a staff almost as big as the one we have in America is needed to cover the ground. Mr. Izard has been given carte blanche to establish news connections wherever he deems it advisable, and he will not return until Kinogram's foreign staff can be rated as second to none."

During Mr. Izard's absence the editorial staff will be headed by J. V. FitzGerald, and Herbert E. Hancock, who, as was previously announced, were recently added to the personnel in the New York office.

When the "Pace Makers" (F. B. O.) played the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Manager Harry Jones displayed the F. B. O. short subject above the feature on the marquis.

Davis To Offer Wide Variety

Features and Short Subjects Will Make Diversified Program for State Righters

DAVIS distributing Division has lined up a complete service for the state right exchanges. It includes nearly every style of picture with the exception of the news reel. In addition to many feature productions there is a wide variety of short subjects. There are two series of comedies, two Ben Wilson serials, the Cinema Stars novelty reels and the Herrick two-reelers.

The McKnight-Womack productions are making the "Hey Fellas" and "Sheiks and Shebas" comedies. In connection with these they have secured the services of Mark Goldain, one of the originators of the "Our Gang" comedies.

The two-reel Herrick series will be released under the title of "Fragments of Life." This group will be produced entirely without titles. The first of the series will be released as "It Might Happen to You." Evangeline Russell, heroine of "Red Love" is the featured player.

The series to be released as "Cinema Stars" is in twenty-six novelty reels and shows film players at work, at home and at play. The Ben Wilson unit will produce two series, one of which is already completed. It is titled "The Mystery Box" and is in ten episodes. The story was written and directed by Alvin J. Neitz and stars Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber.

"The Power God" will be the second of the serial releases in the early Fall. This also features Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. The story is being syndicated to newspapers throughout the country.

"Our Gang" On Pathe List For July 26th

Pathe's releases for the week of July 26th include an "Our Gang" comedy and a Sennett production starring Ralph Graves. Variety is given the program by the inclusion of the second chapter of the Pathe serial "Play Ball," and the regular weekly offerings from other sources, among them the Pathe Review, an "Aesop's Film Fables" reel, and a Grantland Rice "Sportlight."

"Cupid's Boots" is a Mack Sennett Star Comedy with Ralph Graves in the leading role. Graves is seen as a bookkeeper in a shoe store who finds romance in the visits of a certain young lady customer. Ed. Kennedy directed the film from a story by Krank Capra.

"Boys Will Be Joys" is the Hal Roach "Our Gang" film. The inventive genius of Mickey and his little pals results in their making their own "Coney Island" on a vacant lot. While they are enjoying their merry-go-round, ferris wheel and other fun devices, surveyors try to chase them away. The "gang" manage to reach the owner of the property who consents to their having their little park. The direction is by Robert McGowan.

"The Flaming Float" is the title of the second chapter of the latest Pathe serial "Play Ball," written by Manager John J. McGraw of the New York Giants.

"Why Kids Leave Home" is the Grantland Rice "Sportlight." It reveals all the thrills that every child gets when the circus comes to town and pitches tents on the old ball field.

Pathe Review No. 30 presents a trio of diversified subjects. "The Wilderness of Water," a submerged forest in the Mississippi Valley. "The Garden of Seville," Pathecolor views of the Flowery City of Moorish Spain, and "The Two-Legged Horse Race," a novelty race recorded by the "process camera."

"Bucville Field Day" is the latest of the Paul Terry creations "Aesop's Film Fables."

The other subjects which Pathe will release the week of July 26 are "Topics of the Day," and two issues of Pathe News.

Use of Short Subject Program Is Speading

Plan Regularly Employed In Many Cities

THAT the all-short-subject program has passed the experimental stage and may be regarded as an established form of entertainment for use by theatres at regular intervals or upon special occasion is attested by the fact that there are more than twenty theatres scattered through the cities and towns of the country which are known to be making regular use of this type of bill. Many of these houses have used the policy of all-short-subjects on certain days of the week over a period of several years.

To the list of houses which make all-short-subject programs a regular weekly or monthly practice there must be added several of the leading theatres of the country, which from time to time have presented such bills with eminently satisfactory results at the box office. A large proportion of these have announced a decision to repeat these programs on certain occasions throughout the year

There are few cities or towns in the counry which have not presented all-short-subject programs at one time or another. Included in the theatres which have reported success with the plan are houses in New York City, Brooklyn, N. Y., Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Atlantic City, N. J., Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Kansas City and in a majority of the other large cities of the United States.

In Kansas City there is a theatre which for fifteen years has presented all-short-subject programs regularly on Friday nights of each week. This is the Ashland, owned by W. L. Shelton and Richard Stedman, which has done a flourishing business over the entire period it has been under its present management.

Other theatres which have depended for some time upon all-short-subject bills as attractions at regular intervals are the following: the Princess, Carbon, Ind., John McIntire, manager; the Pastime, Seeleville, Ind., Ed Croffits, manager; Star, Winslow, Ind., J. F. Vinyard, manager; Electric, Lapee, Ind., C. McKay, manager; Paramount, Rochester, Ind., Kreighbaum Bros., managers; Rialto, Middletown, Ind., J. Wetz, manager; and the Merit, Hartford, Ark., J. S. Latimer, manager.

Since the Ashland in Kansas City has used the short-subject plan for a span of fifteen years it may be regarded the best available case for consideration of the possibilities of the all-short bill as a box office attraction. The house seats 2,200 and plays to standing room each Friday night at an admission of 5 cents. The man best qualified to describe the experience which the theatre has had with these programs is Richard Stedman, who owns the house in partnership with W. L. Shelton. It might be well to explain that the Ashland is a modern structure, modernly equipped and furnished and that it boasts such unique improvements as a glass inclosed "cry room" for young children and folding side walls which make it possible to convert the house into an airdrome in less than ten minutes. Thus it may be seen that the Ashland is a picture theatre which may be admired for its progressivism on more counts than its all-short-subject programs.

In relating the results which the Ashland has obtained with the all-short-subject bills Mr. Stedman said: "For the fifteen years we have been sticking to the short subject program on Friday nights we have drawn school children from all parts of the city. We co-operate with the Parent-Teacher Association and civic organizations. We have made our theatre a figurative temple for the children on Friday nights. Our short subject programs consist of a 2-reel serial, a 2-reel comedy, a 2-reel drama and a 1-reel comedy—all for five cents, and I won't hesitate to tell you that we make money on it.

"The length of such a program usually runs about 1½ hours, although if we were rushed we could shorten it to one hour and fifteen minutes. Adults know that Friday night is children's night. Consequently there is no effort on that night to check the youngsters in making noise in the front part of the house. That's what our theatre is operated for on that night. What better advertisement would we want than for the neighborhood for blocks around to hear loud cheering and laughter in our theatre. They're liable to be there themselves the next night, eh? Other nights are ten cents.

"Say what you will, the average school boy doesn't take much to the seven or eight reel feature. Edmund Cobb, for instance, in a 2-reeler would outdraw Norma Talmadge more than 3 to 1, as far as the youngsters are concerned. The ratio of boys and girls to adults on Friday night is about 2 to 1. We play for them that night—not their parents. We have the seats to put them in and when you fill 2,200 seats and then stand them up around the walls at 5 cents you have a pretty fair amount in your box office for the night. As to advertising, we use only a 4 x 4 inch program card, one set of 1-sheets on the serial, one on the drama and one on the comedy. We advertise a week in advance in our lobby. We have the youngsters so well educated about Friday night that no special exploitation effort is necessary. Just put the sheets up in the lobby and give them the titles and stars for Friday night and they'll be there. We use no newspaper advertising. Why should we? The following incident will explain the folly of it:

"One night there was a scarlet fever epidemic in our neighborhood and a man from the board of education came to my theatre to stand in the door and check up on the boys who entered the theatre. I told him that a check on the Ashland school would be fruitless, as I drew youngsters from all over the city. We walked over to a group of boys, just for experiment, and asked them where they were from. They proved to be from a district ten miles from the theatre. Several such tests disclosed that virtually all parts of the city were represented.

"There is no other theatre in Kansas City which plays a short subject night that I know of, but you can rest assured that it will be another fifteen years—and then some—before we ever consider abandoning the idea. It has been the bulwark of the success of our theatre."

J. S. Latimer, manager of the Merit in Hartford, Ark., where short subject programs were established recently stated that the move was being made with the hope of saving the theatre during the summer months.

"Starting July 2," said Mr. Latimer, "we are changing from feature to short length subjects, using a serial in two reels, a two-reel comedy and a one-reel subject to fill Thursday; a two-reel western, two-reel comedy and a one-reel educational comedy for Friday, a Universal Jewel feature with a comedy for our Saturday's offering, and leaving Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday dark. All shows are dark in the state of Arkansas on Sunday."

Bray Enlarges Quarters for Cartoon Series

THE Bray Studios have enlarged their quarters in West 46th street, New York to accommodate the larger staff necessary for the production of twenty-six subjects for F. B. O. release during the coming season. The subjects will consist of thirteen Dinky Doodle cartoons and thirteen Unnatural History Cartoons.

The Dinky Doodles will be burlesques of famous fairy tales and feature pictures of the current year. The first of the latter will be "Don Q." The Unnatural History cartoons will also be burlesques, the first four titles of which are "Where the Leopard Got His Spots," "How the Elephant Got His Trunk," "Where the Camel Got His Hump" and "Where the Zebra Got his Stripes."

F. B. O.'s SHORT SUBJECTS will help keep your house packed

It is a fact that Short Subjects have not been given the attention and consideration by the majority of Exhibitors that they are fully entitled to. Why? Mainly because short subjects have heretofore been considered "also rans" when the truth of the matter is that they are "HALF OF YOUR SHOW" and ofttimes the whole show.

As an Exhibitor, you know that if your news weekly were taken away from you—and if you could get no comedies, 2-reel series, cartoons, or novelties, your business would rapidly dwindle away for no audience could be constantly drawn to theatres by features alone.

Yet Exhibitors advertise their features strongly, even weak features are given the big advertising preference, when it is a known fact that given the proper advertising consideration and even half hearted exploitation, you can pack your house by boosting your short subjects, relegating your feature to a mere "mention" in your ads when that feature doesn't deserve any more.

F. B. O. is distributing a wonderful array of Short Subjects that are absolutely "sure fire" at the box office.

Every exhibitor in the land recalls the sensational success of our original "Fighting Blood" series.

In our new Sam Hellman series we've got the original Fighting Bloods lashed to the mast. Sam Hellman is the famous and widely popular SATURDAY EVENING POST writer with a following of millions, giving you a ready made audience for this new series—2 reels each—with 12 chapters. Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Cupid's Boots"
Pathe—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy)

RALPH GRAVES appears here as the star of a spook-comedy built around a dream in which he successfully courts a daughter of a rich and autocratic banker. It is a "crazy-quilt" affair made in the cutting room from reels and reels of film presenting familiar gags in a familiar fashion. We suspect it was made some time ago and has been held up while better pictures of this star had opportunity to go forth and establish him with the fans as a two-reel comedian.

The play is concerned with the adventures of a shoe-clerk who quits his job in order to find romance and adventure. He hits the open road and snug in his little tent the first evening of the journey he has a dream. The action which follows is dream-like in its incoherence and disregard for the probable and the possible. It shows the girl he loves in the clutches of a villainous band. They make her captive and with her mother and father keep the dear charmer locked up in a dilapidated house. They, the villains, are a wicked lot and like all villains they put off the evil they contemplate until the hero can put within striking distance.

The picture offers only action, physical movement for which there is no discoverable motive. It seems a little too extreme in the respect that no cerebration is demanded of the spectator, for spectators are being taught to look for a little bit of plot and story value in their two-reel comedies and some of the lesson, we think, has been learned by this time.

The Cast

The Shoe Clerk.....Ralph Graves
His Sweetheart.....Thelma Hill

A Mack Sennett production directed by Ed Kennedy. Story by Frank Capra.

The Story.—A shoe clerk dares to flirt, and not unsuccessfully, with the daughter of an autocratic banker, who thereupon demands that the clerk be fired. But the clerk has already decided to venture forth in search of romance and adventure, which he finds plentiful in a dream about how he rescues the girl from a band of villains who seek to ruin the wealthy banker and take possession of his pretty but spunky daughter.

Classification.—Melodramatic comedy with a strong admixture of slapstick.

Summary.—A fast-moving but patched-up affair based on the idea that there is nothing funnier than a colored gentleman "scared silly" at the sight of dark rooms filled with furniture over which white sheets have been draped.

Ralph Graves and Thelma Hill are the principals in "Cupid's Boots," a Pathe two-reel comedy produced by Mack Sennett.

Lige Conley in a scene from "Below Zero," his new comedy for Educational.

"Captured Alive"
Universal—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HELEN GIBSON is the star of this two-reel western which is filled with the usual romance, intrigue and comedy. It is the old story of the rustlers with the trusted ranch foreman the head of the band, and the hero the boy who turns him up with the assistance of the daughter of the ranch owner. This one goes some of the others one better in that the ranch owner himself is jailed and held on suspicion.

If one is not too critical of these westerns however, this story is not a bad one. In fact it is chock full of incident, it moves along at a good pace and it is well acted. That is as much as can be expected. Helen Gibson plays her role admirably and she is well supported by Edward Peale.

Jim Watson is the rival candidate for sheriff against Bud Harris, incumbent, who has profited on the side through cattle rustling. Jim wins the election with the assistance of Dolly Martin, daughter of the ranch owner, who is one of the chief victims of the rustlers. Dolly's father will not permit her to marry Jim until he has effectively culminated the activities of the rustlers.

Meantime Bud Harris, the defeated candidate, is given the job as foreman of the Martin ranch and continues his rustling, but throws suspicion on the owner of the ranch, who is jailed. Jim and Dolly manage to right the situation by gaining the release of her father and in exciting battle overcome the entire band of rustlers as they are about to abscond with the money realized from the sale of the Martin horses.

The Cast

Dolly Martin.....Helen Gibson
Jim Watson.....Edward Peale

A Universal-Mustang picture.

The Story—Jim Watson, fearless young rancher, wins the office of sheriff and attempts to end the activities of the cattle rustlers, who are headed by his late rival for the office. Action is demanded of him after he has failed for a certain period. With the assistance of Dolly Martin he gets a line on the real culprits after Bud Harris, their leader, has turned suspicion against her father. The entire band of rustlers is captured red-handed by the young couple.

Classification—A fast action, well acted western.

Summary—While the story is somewhat hackneyed, it is full of incident and moves along at a rapid pace, with a new angle injected here and there. All in all it is an improvement on most of these westerns and should go well wherever stories of this character are appreciated.

"Dry Up"
Universal-Century—Two Reels
(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

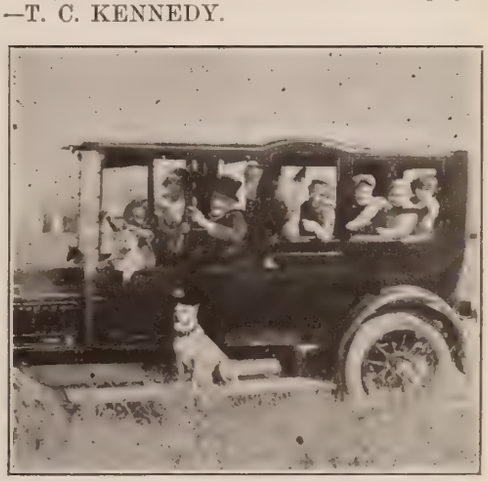
THIS Century comedy fairly abounds with action and hokum. It is a picture of gags to which the slim story is merely incidental. It gives Jack Singleton a chance to show his whole box of tricks as a comedian and he gets away with it in pretty good shape. Though too dumb to get himself admitted to the bar following a correspondence school course, he has a happy faculty of outsmarting the other fellow through the two reels of the picture.

He has managed to stand his landlady off with the promise of a diploma, but receives the word that he has failed in all examinations. Said landlady then takes possession of his clothes and other belongings. Jack is equal to the occasion. He throws a lariat from his window over a passerby and takes possession of the latter's clothes. By the simple expedient of hurling various and sundry articles at passing vendors, they in turn get sore and hurl their wares up at him. In this way he gets the necessary sustenance.

The Cast

The Lady.....Bartine Burkett
The Attorney.....Jack Singleton

A Century comedy. Story by Al Herman; Directed by Al Herman; Featuring Singleton and Miss Burkett.



The Story—Jack, an unauthorized attorney, finds himself without means to meet his lodgings bill and without food. In various ways he overcomes these obstacles and eventually is implored by the fair lady to serve the divorce summons on her husband. Jack makes the attempt, follows the wrong man, eventually succeeds in his mission and then is turned down flat by the repenting wife.

Classification—A slapstick comedy full of humorous incidents and capably acted.

Summary—This comedy is rather weak in story, but it has more than the usual amount of humorous incidents and many of them are bound to bring laughs to almost any audience. Singleton is a good comedian and Miss Burkett does her somewhat limited part well.

When Men Were Men
(Pathe—One Reel)

CARTOONIST Paul Terry takes the spectator back several ages to the time when life was rough and ready. The Cave Man wooer is seen doing his stuff, and with the "atmosphere building" in the way of showing how parents displayed their affection for their offspring by administering lusty wallops and kicks, helps the color and humor of the play. —T. C. KENNEDY.

"Boys Will Be Joys" is the title of the latest "Our Gang" comedy offered by Pathe.

"Boys Will Be Joys"

Pathe—Two Reels

THE "Our Gang" cemedians are shown at their best as back lot inventors in this new comedy directed by Bob McGowan and produced by Hal Roach. The most elaborate props are used in depicting the make-shift roller-coasters, ferris wheels and spinning tables which the kids rig out to equip their amusement park. The most ingenious part of the production is to be found in the design of these "fun" contraptions erected by the gang in their efforts to amuse the public and make some money for themselves, and we think the youngsters of all ages will get many laughs from a view of the results as shown on the screen.

A human interest story enters the affair with the introduction of an elderly captain of industry who has more fun playing with the kids than he does at directors' meetings and beating down the wages of his factory workers. He is the owner of the lot the gang appropriates for their playground and when his surveyors start to stake off the property with a view to building another factory, the kids protest. They take the owner out to their park and he has such a good time helping them rig out their devices that he tells the board of directors to help themselves to the business while he will divert himself as the director general of the playground.

The action is rather fast but there is repetition, as, ideed, is the case every time a producer erects an elaborate setting. It seems as though the cost of the set regulates the length of the footage devoted to action playing therein. However, the comedy producers are not the offenders the feature people are in this regard, and in this case Director McGowan has kept his comedy moving with the inclusion of all the incident he could develop around his settings.

The comedians are, as usual, natural and sincere in their work. They just play their way through the picture and consequently there is never any trace of effort in their acting. It is an amusing and pleasant contribution to the stock of two-reelers which the market has to offer.

The Cast

Mickey Daniels, Mary Kornman, Farina, Joe Cobb, Jackie Condon

The Story.—The "Gang" decide to go in the amusement park business and start to build roller coasters and other contraptions of the sort. Just as they are making progress, their enterprise is threatened for they are informed their lot is to be utilized as a factory site. They appeal to the president of the company which owns the property and so engage him in the affair that he promises to let them use the lot and helps them to make a success of the venture.

Classification.—Juvenile comedians in wholesome, amusing comedy of youthful pranks in emulation of the grown-up promoters of amusement parks.

Summary.—A finely produced, well acted comedy showing the "Our Gang" troupers at their best. It introdues a human-interest vein which has some emotional appeal and appears capable of winning the applause of the large following of the "Gang" pictures.

"Discord in a Flat"

(Universal-Bulls Eye—One Reel)

A BABY who wanders through this reel playing with a razor and slashing everything in sight with it really is the feature of this picture, which is supposed to feature Arthur Lake. The suspense furnished by this toddling tot will provide more thrills to an audience than the comedy situations will laughs.

Arthur Lake apparently is trying too hard to make a success of these comedies. He has resorted entirely too much to mugging, a failure that has developed to an exceptional degree in the last two or three pictures of this good Sweet Sixteen series.

Arthur is the victim of music loving parents who have a career as a violinist mapped for him. As they take their departure for the evening Arthur leaves off his practicing and phones his girl. The baby promptly cuts the telephone connection, so the girl comes over to see him, as the rival also arrives at the house. The baby eventually breaks Arthur's fiddle over his head just as his father arrives with a new one he has won in a raffle. The story is rather slim, but the picture should be fairly pleasing.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Bugville Field Day

(Pathe—One Reel)

THE term "novelty" loses its meaning when applied to Paul Terry's cartoons we fear, nevertheless it must be used here in connection with this latest "Aesop's Film Fables" reel. The cats and mice, dogs and monkeys of the animal kingdom which have been so well exploited in these reels, here give way to the insects and we have a heroic tale involving a fly, a spider and a lovely lady bug, while sundry and various species of their world join in the action which relates how a fly beats a great spider which has stolen his sweetheart. The setting and characters are changed and therefore the gags must be regarded different, though most of them have appeared before in previous "Aesop's" films. It is fairly amusing.—T. C. KENNEDY.

"Travel Treasures"

(Educational—One Reel)

LYMAN H. HOWE has arranged an exceptionally interesting Hodge Podge in this one which takes the audience to all parts of the world and shows many interesting sights. It is defined as a loose leaf record of a trip around the world. There are scenes in the United States, France, Italy, Japan, China, Russia, Egypt and Australia, with activities in the fields and different industries in each country. With these scenes are interspersed some clever cartoons. It is a picture that should prove attractive in any type house.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Scenes from "Sneezing Beezers," a Pathe two-reeler produced by Mack Sennett with Billy Bevan and Madeline Hurlock at the head of the cast.

"The Milky Way"

(Universal-Bulls Eye—One Reel)

CHARLES PUFFY is the featured comedian in this Bulls Eye which strives almost too hard and too continuously for its laughs. Puffy does his work well however, and there is enough real humor in this one to satisfy the most exacting. It is all slapstick and hokum, but it should get over.

Puffy is in love with Mildred, daughter of a small dairy man who is threatened with ruin by the trust, which takes all his employees from him. Puffy saves the situation by volunteering his services. He becomes involved in all sorts of mixups. Among them he attempts to milk a bull with disastrous results to himself. The rival company substitutes a race horse for his regular milk wagon horse and when the animal runs away Puffy is the victim of the contents of the wagon. He outwits the rivals in the end however, and becomes a partner in the prosperous business. This one has lots of laughs and should go well in the neighborhood houses.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Pathe Review No. 30

(One Reel)

"THE Wilderness of Water" is the title of a number made up of scenes showing Reelfoot Lake, in the Mississippi Valley, and this takes leading honors in Pathe Review No. 30. It is not much different than most scenics, save that here the views are beautiful and have a distinctive charm—a quality not so strange in view of the fact that Reelfoot Lake has the unusual antecedents of being named after a lame Indian and is the gift of an earthquake, which disturbance shuffled Nature's cards and converted a forest into a lake. The color subject shows scenes of Seville, which is depicted in the fashion followed by the nickel postcards the tourist sends back home with the "wish you were here" greeting cheerily traced upon them. The weird photographic accomplishments of the so-called "process camera" are revealed in pictures taken at an ostrich farm. "The Wilderness of Water" makes this issue an interesting contribution for any program.—T. C. KENNEDY.

Pathe Review No. 29

(One Reel)

A POLAR bear, a lion cub and other animals of the London Zoo romp away with the feature honors in this interesting number of the Review. The beasties are born screen comedians and without the slighest conscious effort at acting they supply gestures and postures which touch the peak of the grotesque. The animals appear in a secrets of nature series called "Animal Appetites." A new submarine torch or drill is displayed in "Submarine Salvage," a group of scenes showing the operation of the drill in cutting through the hulls of sunken vessels. The Pathecolor subject, showing views of San Francisco rounds out the offering.—T. C. KENNEDY.

For the Love of a Gal

(Pathe—One Reel)

THE cartoonist goes in for love interest in this contribution to the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. Courtship is of the modern, super-six type, the hero taking his sweetheart for a drive in his car. But the contraption breaks down, and with it the loyalty of his gal, for she accepts the invitation of another chap in a bigger and better machine. Pirates kidnap the girl and then the hero extends himself, fighting some "Peter Pan" duels with the blackguards and defeating the whole murderous crew of them. The girl pleads for forgiveness and the show ends in a final close-up clutch. The reel affords many amusing moments.—T. C. KENNEDY.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

His Buddy's Wife

(Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

FOR half its length this picture tells a heart interest story with a lot of truth and feeling even though the director has stressed the pathos and sentiment far too much for the purposes of the plot. The simple way these reels are treated will extract a fine response everywhere.

At the start we see a young man bidding a farewell to his aged mother and his bride. He has enlisted for overseas. What follows are several sustaining library shots interspersed with a few close-ups that are genuine, featuring war incident. The single fellow has secretly worshipped his buddy's wife—and when the married one is assigned to a dangerous job he extracts a promise from the other to look after his family. These scenes are all done very well—except for the over-emphasis of the pathos.

It is when the hero comes back to fulfil his promise that the story loses most of its human touch. The director follows the conventional methods. He shows up the narrow intolerance of the natives in scorning the young widow and accusing the soldier of being a scoundrel. And this on top of the fine reputation the heroine has borne in the community. The hero defends her good name by strikign one of the scandal-mongers and is tried for assault and battery. The story has ended once with the youth striking up a romance with the widow. But it starts all over again with a counterplot of complications which are cleared up when the widow testifies and reveals the reason for the young man's presence.

Then comes an anti-climax when the husband returns home. Instead of being killed he had been captured. The director deserves praise for showing a surprise and bringing out the finish logically. Does the buddy look in the window, spy his wife in the arms of his friend and turn away like Enoch Arden? He does not. The hero discovers him and tells him all about his romance. He is the one who sacrifices himself. This may disappoint the fans, inasmuch as the most sympathetic character loses his happiness, but it is real. It holds up fairly well, but the latter scenes spoil considerable of its human appeal. However, it is clean and wholesome—and looks like a good bet for average houses. Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy play their parts with good feeling.

THEME. Heart interest drama of war buddies—one married, the other single. The latter returns with news of his friend's death and has romance with the young widow. The buddy turns up and the youth sacrifices his happiness.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The sentiment. The heart interest moments in soldier's leave-taking. The return of hero and his romance. The scorn of the villagers.

DIRECTION. Develops it to extract sympathy and sentiment. Piles it on a little too thick for the story needs balance. Shows an honest ending when hero sacrifices himself. This may disappoint a lot of the folks.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tie up with Legion posts. Play up the heart interest. Play up the romance of war hero and his buddy's wife and his fine sacrifice. Put on prologue numbers of male quartette dressed in khaki, etc.

DRAWING POWER. A good audience picture for average houses. Title should appeal.

SUMMARY. A tender little picture, heavy with sentiment and pathos, but withal tugging at the heart strings until the latter reels when it reveals some far-fetched incident of village life. Is well acted—and holds the interest.

THE CAST

SYNOPSIS. Youth enlists for war and falls in love with buddy's wife from a photograph. When the married one is reported missing, the hero returns home and imparts the sad news to his wife. The Marriage Whirl

(First National—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THROUGH intelligent treatment and handling the theme so that no suggestion of melodrama could spoil it, Al Santell, the director, has worked out a likely picture from Hartley Manners' play, "The National Anthem." It was in the original that Laurette Taylor starred and the time it was produced found the jazz craze riding on the crest of popularity. A great number of pictures have been presented since then—which have carried a similar theme, but none have got down to the simple human properties which mark this production. Most of them have relied upon melodrama seasoned with a lot of spice to get over. There is spice in this picture, too—but it has a logical part in the development. In other words the story never gets out of key with its plot.

It's a picture that is reasonably true. The characters certainly appear genuine and there is no heavy sop thrown to the moralities. With the disintegration of character of the wife due to her marrying a reckless, irresponsible youth and being dragged down to his level we see her trying to defy the spirit of jazz. When she can no longer stand the incessant noise and the devastating influence of her husband she tries to kill herself. The faith of an erstwhile suitor and the doctor's treatment pull her through—and she marries the former when her husband meets a tragic death.

The atmosphere of jazz is carried all through the picture. There is one wild party after another. And the drama is there too. It is an effective scene when the disillusioned wife finds her father dead—and again when her distorted mind visualizes the jazz players and their instruments in all kinds of distorted shapes. No heroics are introduced. The honorable suitor is a true friend who does not wear a halo of virtue over his head. It's a story that develops straight to its climax—and while the idea is somewhat morbid there is no denying that it commands strict attention. It is well mounted, though some of the sets are too large. As for the acting it certainly gives Corinne Griffith great emotional opportunities—and she takes advantage of them. She never appeared more beautiful than in the close-ups. By the way she can stand a close-up better than any other actress of the screen.

THEME. Drama of the jazz age showing girl rushing into matrimony with a gay youth. Regrets the marriage after being satisfied with the fast life. Tries to kill herself, but is restored to health and finds ultimate happiness.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The development of the jazz atmosphere. The scene when the fathers surprise their children in an intoxicated condition. Moment when girl realizes her father is dead. The Parisian scenes.

DIRECTION. Has brought out the full meaning of Manners' play. Has emphasized the spirit of jazz as a wrecker of homes. Gets real drama of romance—and gives a proper emphasis in all his scenes.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Feature a jazz band or a saxophone sextette in prologue. Bill as film version of the popular play in which Laurette Taylor starred. Play up star—featuring her beauty and acting ability.

DRAWING POWER. Star and title should draw them. Suitable for all houses—as it is easily understood.

SUMMARY. A good picture, this—of the jazz age—and the defiance of youth. Is something of a flapper story, but it carries a good lesson without preaching at you. Tells its plot well, carries humor and effective drama.

The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted

(Warner Brothers—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

WARNER BROTHERS may well be proud of this feature, one of the first of its new season group. It is a picture built for the box office, a type now in demand by theatregoers.

The story is interesting from start to close. It is a modern political-society tale with some new twists and the action keeps moving along smoothly and logically to the melodramatic seventh reel. A district attorney refusing to help free the son of another man, suddenly finds himself in a position where he has to prosecute his own son on a charge of manslaughter. His sense of judicial duty forces him into the situation. The wife and mother, however, becomes desperate and enters into a plot with her husband's political opponent to bring about the defeat of the husband in return for a promise that her son will be freed if the other man is elected.

The action starts with a thrilling auto wreck, followed by an equally tense courtroom scene in which the mother sees her son led away to a cell, although innocent, after he has been charged by a girl friend with the death of a woman killed in the accident. There is more action as the wife, finding her husband will not resign rather than prosecute his son, takes the leading part in a framed raid on a questionable inn, so as to bring scandal and defeat to her husband. But the real kick is in the climax when the girl, really guilty of the woman's death, drops a cigarette in the grass and starts a forest conflagration which results in the explosion of a powder house, the wrecking of a dam and the flooding of the surrounding area.

It is superbly mounted, beautifully photographed and excellently directed. It is a personal triumph for Irene Rich.

THEME. Society drama in which a mother and wife fights her own husband when he refuses to come to the aid of the son, feeling that he is in duty bound as district attorney to prosecute him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The auto wreck. The courtroom scene in which the son is charged with manslaughter after a young couple cowardly accuse him of the deed of which they are guilty. The scenes between Miss Rich and Gayne Whitman.

DIRECTION. James Flood has turned out a real achievement in this feature which he has packed with action, tacking on a climax of big thrills for good measure. He has also inspired his players to flawless acting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the title. It is a real box office magnet. Boost Irene Rich and the fine cast. Tell your patrons about the big forest fire, the powder house explosion, the blowing up of the dam, the flood and many other thrills. Tie up with Mothers' Clubs.

DRAWING POWER. This is the kind of picture present day picture fans like and it should attract business in any size house because it has the cast and the story.

SUMMARY. If all Warner Brothers' pictures for the new season are as good as this one exhibitors may be able to offer their patrons some treats. Here we have a plot with a different angle, a cast of talented players and a punch in every reel with a climax that will be talked about.

Mannering finds his wife in Wallace's rooms. He denounces her, not understanding her motives. They separate. Diane Graham confesses to Eileen at a country estate that she was driving the death car. Diane and Eileen are saved from a forest fire and flood. There is a reconciliation and the son is freed.

The Scarlet West

(Frank J. Carroll Production-First National—Nine Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

FIRST NATIONAL is to be congratulated for coming forward at this time with this splendid story of the great West in the making as an aid to exhibitors in proving to their patrons that The Greater Movie Season really means something. "The Scarlet West," is undoubtedly one of the finest western pictures produced in many moons.

It is a tale of the West just after the closing of the strife between North and South when pioneers pushing ever toward the Golden Gate were finding their progress disputed by warlike Indians. Much of the action revolves around the romance and adventure encountered by the soldiers and women of historic Fort Remington, then the outpost of the American military forces. While the picture is filled with dramatic T. N. T., the outstanding sequence is that depicting in realistic manner the last stand of General Custer which has gone down in history as one of the most glorious events in the winning of the West.

There are several battles with the Red Skins, attacks on forts and burning of villages. The plot centers around Cardelanche, son of an Indian chief, who after saving some American soldiers from renegade Indians, is recommended for a captaincy. He accepts it but soon finds himself an outcast when he falls in love with Miriam, the daughter of the commander of the fort. Robert Frazer gives to his characterization of Cardelanche a convincing interpretation, winning real sympathy for the role. Robert Edeson is immense as General Kinnard. Clara Bow is seen to advantage in a role very different from her recent flapper arts and does well in it. Johnny Walker and Walter McGrail are good as rivals

THEME. Western drama of General Custer's days depicting the romance of an Indian who fell in love with a white maiden, only to be forced to give her up.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The scene in which Cardelanche saves the white soldiers from renegade Indians. The scene in which Lieut. Parkman knocks down another officer who insults Miriam. The reducing of Parkman to the ranks. The scene showing Custer's Last Stand.

DIRECTION. John G. Adolphi deserves much praise for the realistic manner in which he has transferred this delightful drama of the golden west to the silver sheet. He has inserted a wealth of detail, given the picture a beautiful natural background and made his players convincing.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Go after the schools hard on this, playing up its historic value. Dress the lobby in Indian style. Put on a wild west parade if possible. If you can get a real Indian to doll up in his war paint and native costume as a ballyhoo-great!

DRAWING POWER. O. K. for most houses, with an especial appeal for family audiences and the towns.

SUMMARY. This is the kind of picture that is in demand now by patrons. It is filled with action of the kind that folks can sit back and enjoy. There is a fine cast and settings that rank among the most beautiful ever shown on the screen. Should go over big with its rich exploitation possibilities.

Marry Me!

(Paramount—5526 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S not much to this picture if you consider it in terms of drama. It is a delicate little story, fashioned from fine silken threads of romance. Yet these same threads are unbreakable the way James Cruze has woven them together. With less competent direction they would have broken asunder. It is as much a feather in his cap to build a picture of this kind as something of the substantial order like "The Covered Wagon." He has embroidered it with human touches, bringing out its wistful appeal, its gentle comedy and pathos. It is just a tale of a small town school-teacher longing for romance. And so delightfully is it told that you accept it all as very real—this in spite of the fact of its gossamer structure.

Cruze, above everything else in his direction, builds his characterization first. Make the figures life-like—and the motivation will take care of itself. This is the way he has worked here. He has sensed that the plot cannot sustain itself. So he emphasizes the characterization. His small town types are fine selections and he brings the close-up into prominence to make them vivid.

The story traces the romance of this school-teacher played with splendid feeling and sympathy by Florence Vidor There is a sentimental tug when the egg upon which she had accepted a youth's proposal is sent to the city and allowed to rest in cold storage. So the girl waits four years and then another John Smith comes into her life—a John Smith who would never suggest a romantic adventure.

When the girl sees him she has recourse to tears. He is not her ideal of the great lover. He is a timid "hypo" who takes pills, medicine and his temperature in unending repetition. Moreover, he is afraid of the girl. They are thrust into matrimony, but under the sympathetic glow of her personality the young man's timidity and foolish fears are banished. Edward Everett Horton is an ideal choice for this role. He plays with fine understanding of its demands. It is well mounted, expertly captioned—and its tender heart appeal will win you.

THEME. Romantic comedy-drama of lovelorn girl who waits patiently for youth only to have romance with one who does not meet her ideal. She overcomes his timidity and finds happiness.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The delightful human touches. Scene when wrong hero comes to town. The small town atmosphere. The manner in which couple are thrust into matrimony. The appealing studies by Florence Vidor and Edward Everett Horton.

DIRECTION. Establishes characterization and builds his plot accordingly. Saturates it with fine human touches. Brings out some gentle comedy. Keeps it in its mood.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the story with teasers showing the matrimonial market value of cold storage eggs. Play up Cruze and principal players. The title carries teaser possibilities—and suggests tie-ups with merchants catering to newlyweds.

DRAWING POWER. Title, director, and players should draw. Needs exploitation, but should interest all romance-seekers. O. K. for any type of house.

SUMMARY. A quiet, but charming little picture—one exceedingly fragile. But it holds together due to the fine direction by James Cruze. Is dovetailed with splendid human touches, carries gentle humor and wistful charm. No drama here, but plenty of sentiment and romance.

THE CAST

Hetty Gandy	Florence Vidor
John Smith No. 2	Edward Everett Horton
John Smith No. 1	John Roche
Sarah Hume	Helen Jerome Eddy
Granny	Fanny Midgley
Norman Frisbie	Ed. Brady
Jenkins	Z. Wall Covington
Mrs. Hume	Anna Schaefer
Jackson	Erwin Connelly

Adapted by Walter Woods and Anthony Goldewey from Anne Caldwell's play, "The Nest Egg." Directed by James Cruze. Photographed by Karl Brown.

SYNOPSIS. School teacher fearing spinsterhood writes acceptance of proposal on an egg. But it never reaches the youth it was intended for. After four years another man, a timid hypochondriac, comes into her life and they are thrust into matrimony to save the girl from becoming the village joke. She learns to love him and her sympathy banishes his foolish fears.

Under the Rouge

(Encore-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SHAPING up as a box-office attraction through its play of incident and action and the convincing manner in which it is acted, "Under the Rouge," should pass muster anywhere as a first rate crook melodrama. True, it is rather involved and some situations are too vague in their treatment in that the action unfolded is glossed over considerably, but there isn't a moment that it fails to sustain the interest.

There is one scene which is given undue emphasis since one of the principal crooks is eliminated. But his death is never explained, nor is the episode clearly established. We see the two crooks in a gun battle with a chauffeur (who is killed) and a couple of cops. But after the lesser crook fades out of the picture and death scene the incident is closed. Meanwhile his pal is permitted his liberty after a few weeks in jail. Which introduces too much charity by the forces of law and order. Otherwise the plot holds up very well, allowing for some coincidence—and a few unimportant gaps.

It is a picture carrying a redemption theme worked out via romance. The crook's sweetheart longs for the peace of the country and when she arrives there she has a mild love affair with a supposedly honest youth. The hero follows and gets a job in the local bank. But they have enemies in another set of crooks who are posing as evangelists. One of them lures the banker's wilful daughter into a near-scandal with his offer of marriage, but the hero rescues her just in time. There is a lot of incident in the introductory scenes—and plenty of it in the country episodes, which is another way of saying that the plot doesn't lack for action.

It moves briskly and presents some surprise touches as well as a fair amount of suspense. The finish showing the heroine determined to commit suicide is well executed. She has thrown away the paddle and the canoe has approached almost to the brink of the falls when the hero jumps in and saves her. Old? Yes, but never done any better. The acting is competent.

THEME. Crook Melodrama featuring the redemption of a pair of crooks. When the girl goes to the country the youth follows—and the quiet environment and sympathetic treatment accorded them by the natives has its effect.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The convincing work by Tom Moore, Eddie Phillips, Mary Alden and others in cast. The crook incident. The attempted suicide of heroine and her rescue. Scene when hero's pal dies.

DIRECTION. Has concocted a good crook melodrama, though some of the strings could be tied better. Shows some gaps which need explaining, but in the main has constructed a box-office picture.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. This title should stimulate interest. Tie up with dealers of cosmetics. Exploit as fascinating crook story enacted by an all-star cast.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for average houses. Cast should draw and title has magnetic quality.

SUMMARY. An entertaining crook melodrama which allowing for a few gaps is as reasonably true as any of them. It features the redemption theme—and while you may anticipate the action all the way nevertheless it contains some good incident and characterization.

The Freshman

(Harold Lloyd-Pathe—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AND the greatest of these is—"The Freshman." There's no question but what the foregoing statement will be the verdict passed on Harold Lloyd's newest comedy. So good is each succeeding picture that it is invariably called his greatest. He has been hitting such a high mark from the day he branched out to five reelers that it doesn't seem possible that there could be any improvement. Yet he is able to go by the previous mark with each new effort. Which shows what a great organization he has in working harmoniously together to achieve the best possible results. We've had college stories time and again, but the true spirit of the campus, the boyish enthusiasms, the effort to excel and the good-natured rivalry of the boys—these points have never been caught as they are here.

We get the human side of college life and the high explosives of comedy do not accumulate until the atmosphere, the characters—and all the necessary incident is thoroughly planted. Thus the freshman bids for sympathy—a point which is never lost sight of from the day he arrives until he saves the day for good old Tate. There are no loose threads. The boy has saved a bank account to spend in college. He has the previous year's most popular man to look up to his ideal. But he would surpass him. So he tries to make a hit—and being a perfect boob doesn't realize that he is the joke of the campus.

By this time the laughs are being spread—and they accumulate until you are bent nearly double. They come right from the diaphram—these laughs. There is great fun when Harold allows himself to be the tackling dummy for the football squad—and again when he gives a dinner dance, attired in a tuxedo which has merely been basted together. The tailor has to accompany him to sew up the suit when it falls apart. This is bright, new incident—which runs its pace—to be followed by something else equally amusing—and novel. But the high spots are found in the football game—when Harold is sent in as the last substitute and proceeds to get tangled up with the players, the signals and every other thing that comes on the field. He is always out of position and is considered a pest by the coach and the players, but he manages to get the fumbled ball and score the touchdown. It is the greatest climax we've ever seem in a comedy—a climax uproariously funny. There is pathos and romance, too. No elements are forgotten to make it a well-balanced picture.

THEME. Romantic comedy of freshman in college who strives to be a popular hero. Is a joke on the campus, but makes good and wins respect.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The campus atmosphere. The incident. Lloyd being used as tackling dummy. Scene at dance when Lloyd wears basted tuxedo. The football game—and the new gags. The subtitles.

DIRECTION. Have certainly put over a live-wire comedy—timing every scene perfectly—planting all the elements to build the laughs. Shows a big array of bright new gags—and finishes with a great climax.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tie up with schools and colleges, etc. Bill as Lloyd's funiest comedy. Put on atmospheric prologue suggestive of campus, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Dust off your S. R. O. sign—you'll need it here. Should pack every type of house—everywhere

SUMMARY. Lloyd's funniest picture. Has some exceptionally comic scenes—the gags being new and the incident bright and zippy. Is balanced with human touches, sentiment and romance. Certainly hits a very high mark. A sure-fire knockout. Will make a wooden Indian laugh.

Headlines

(St. Regis-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHEN a story is based on the theme of a woman's sacrifice of her good name and position to protect someone very dear to her you can bank upon it carrying enough heart appeal to please the average picturegoer. "Headlines" is such a story—and it tells its plot with a minimum effort, there being no beating around the bush in expressing it in terms of simple, direct action. The sponsors have not written any melodrama into it. There is surprise attending a few important situations. You anticipate scandal and a courtroom scene which could have been developed from the divorce angle.

The title never comes into the prominence suggested from the opening flash when the heroine, a feature writer on a city newspaper, refuses an assignment to cover some European question so that she might correct her flapper daughter, expelled from school. There is a good atmosphere of the "city room" with some gentle comedy, introducing the old fellow who writes the lovelorn column. The characters are well planted. The heroine has kept it a secret that she has a daughter and tries to discourage a young suitor. But the girl comes home and passes her mother off as her sister until the older woman finally declares the relationship to the ardent youth.

The subsequent action plays up the flirtatious moods of the flapper who delivers herself of romantic wise-cracks and has a giddy time with her various escorts. The girl really dominates the picture the moment she appears. And Virginia Lee Corbin is an excellent type for the flapper. Her biggest scene is when the mother, portrayed by Alice Joyce, breaks in on an engagement she is having with a wealthy idler in the latter's home. This bit of action is the climax, and it carries some effective dramatics as the man's wife surprises him while the mother, refusing to reveal her daughter's presence, takes the blame. The youthful suitor makes his entrance and is chagrined over the affair. But in the end he appreciates the woman's fine sacrifice and joins her on shipboard. So there is no scandal—and all ends happily. The picture is well treated in its continuity and directed with an eye to dramatic values.

THEME. Drama of a mother's sacrifice in bringing scandal upon herself to save her daughter's honor. Finds happiness in romance and the salvation of the girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The sincere acting by Alice Joyce, who was daring enough to play a mother role. The competent support. Atmosphere in newspaper office. The cabaret scene. The climax when the mother lies to defend her daughter. The continuity.

DIRECTION. Has brought out some fine human interest in simple story. Makes characters real and builds important scenes well. Lays off melodramatic stuff. The villain turns out to be a square-shooter. Mounts it convincingly—except for heroine's home—which is a trifle too lavish.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up title—and teaser it through newspapers. Play up Alice Joyce as playing one of the most courageous roles of her career. Emphasize the love of a mother for her daughter.

DRAWING POWER. A good audience picture for the average houses. Star well known and should draw patronage. O. K. for downtown districts and small towns.

SUMMARY. A first rate picture, simple of plot, but handled intelligently. Scenarist and director have treated it sympathetically. No hokum nor any melodramatics. Just a pleasant little picture which holds the interest

Manhattan Madness

(Price-Fine Arts—Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IN looking over the market for a suitable picture for Jack Dempsey, his sponsor, Oscar Price, turned to one of Douglas Fairbanks' most popular stories, "Manhattan Madness," which was made back in the old Triangle days. The new star being an active fellow like Doug, needed an action picture. And the former vehicle was just made to order for him. It has been completely re-written and certainly affords Dempsey forty minutes of solid excitement as well as the audience out front.

To the old-timers who remember the Triangle releases (they certainly haven't forgotten this one) it won't appear as much of a novelty. But a new generation of picturegoers have come along since the original. They should like it. Moreover they'll be interested in Dempsey—and that goes for the old-timers. Of course they'll all agree that it is a hokum picture which is built entirely on the premise of surprise. It is a surprise as much for the hero as it is for the patrons—but the latter must belong to the new generation to profit by it.

It is well done allowing for some colorless comedy relief expressed by a pair of eccentric cowpunchers—and some repetitious incident leading up to the clilmax. We see Dempsey as a westerner bound for New York. He scoffs at the big town—says it lacks excitement and thrills. So his friends proceed to show him his judgment is all wrong. They lure him into a mysterious house and put him through all kinds of stunts. It is planted that the friends and their hired "roughnecks" are taking it as seriously as the hero.

Dempsey uses his famous left—and his equally famous right. His footwork is agile too. He plunges through trap-doors, is fired on, is forced to defend himself against a dozen men—or more. He squares accounts by kidnaping the heroine and compelling her to elope with him. The players are forced to work hard here. Dempsey has them frightened now and then. But it is easy to see that he "pulls" his punches so as not to punish them too severely.

THEME. Adventure romance of westerner who comes to New York and belittles the city. His friends surprise him with plenty of excitement.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The episodes of adventure when westerner is lured to suburban house and compelled to fight for his life. The speed of the incident.

DIRECTION. Has speeded up the episodes leading to climax, but gets off to a rather slow start. Might have dispensed with some of the comedy relief—which is not funny.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Fans should be interested in Dempsey—and his name well exploited should bring business. Also feature his wife, Estelle Taylor, who is co-starred with him. Bill as a snappy, action picture.

DRAWING POWER. Most everyone is interested in the champion and his bride. Suitable for average houses.

SUMMARY. This is a new version of the Fairbanks picture—the first being made several years ago. It affords Jack Dempsey an active role in which he has occasion to "clean up" the boys, but to anyone who saw the original there isn't any suspense.

He had become interested in a pretty girl en route and she also appears among the jokers. To help her in combating several "villains" and to fight for his own life, the westerner has his hands full. But he puts over several timely punches. In the end he realizes that the whole affair is a practical joke.

Pretty Ladies

(Metro-Goldwyn—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is just about the most accurate picture of theatrical life that has ever reached the screen. In the short time Monta Bell has been directing pictures he has been a stickler for telling the truth as he sees it. He doesn't paint any false colors or dress up a story to point some rousing climax. He takes a script and "shoots" it as is. What comes forth is an honest effort. Here he has taken Adela Rogers St. John's story which glorifies romance back stage among the Follies and produced a picture which is colorful and entertaining. It shows painstaking attention to detail and atmosphere.

Now what is the plot? Just a simple little narrative of a comedienne who craves romance. She builds her dreams and worships an ideal, but eventually has a love affair with the trap drummer. There isn't much to it, but so well is the incident stressed—so human are the various scenes, that you accept it all as very true.

The comedienne realizes she is invited around just to make them laugh. Then when she wins the trap drummer who writes a fine number for her (the House Fly Blues)—a number that would look well in any theatrical revue—the prima donna tries to steal him away from her. The climax is honest to the core. The drummer, having married the comedienne, forgets his marital vows and his wife learns the truth. But is there any scene? We'll say there isn't. Bell doesn't work that way. The girl forgives him. She tells herself it will never happen again. You see she has faith in him. There is tone and quality in this production. It has been directed with sympathy and feeling—and played in the same manner by Tom Moore, Zasu Pitts and the other players.

THEME. Comedy drama of back-stage revolving around lack of romance in life of comedienne. Love comes to her and when she nearly loses it she wins back her husband through having faith in him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The theatrical atmosphere. The imitation of the Follies. The color of the Follies sequences. The moment when heroine wins her man—and again when she nearly loses him. The tone and quality of sets. The acting.

DIRECTION. Shows keen sympathy with characterization and gets everything out of plot. Balances his scenes to extract comedy and pathos. Shows variety of action and always holds the interest.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Certainly play up the Follies—which is good publicity for the Ziegfeld show. Put on lavish prologue. By all means exploit the cast—several top-notchers having nothing but small parts.

DRAWING POWER. The title—the tone and quality of sets—the cast—all of these should bring patronage. Suitable for big town theatres and the small houses.

SUMMARY. Another "ace" for Monta Bell—who has put over one of the most interesting pictures of back-stage life ever shown. It is very life like—is packed with human touches, humor and pathos. And is finely mounted—and splendidly acted.

Baltimore

BUSINESS in Baltimore took another slump during the first part of the week beginning Monday, July 6, due to the hot, sticky weather which settled down upon the city during that time.

Harry Van Hoven, advertising manager for the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century, New, Garden and Parkway Theatres, is also known in the auto racing world as a great manager and tactician.

With the opening of the new Baltimore - Washington speedway, Van Hoven was right on the job with a scheme to take motion pictures of the events and the salient points of the big 250 mile classic.

Rights were secured by the Combined Whitehurst Interests for this purpose and Mr. Van Hoven superintended the taking of several thousand feet of film with five cameras placed at strategic points about the track and two others to catch the unforeseen happenings that might result.

The special idea of Mr. Van Hoven was to show the film as soon after the race as possible at the Garden Theatre.

While his wife and ten year old daughter sat near him watching the show at Keith's Hippodrome on Friday night, July 3, Frank School, drummer in the orchestra at that playhouse, suddenly fell over dead. He was quickly taken to the Volunteers of America Hospital and pronounced dead by Dr. Harry K. Gorsuch, coroner, from natural causes. The audience did not know of the death until they read of it in the papers next morning for the musicians kept on playing and the comedians on the stage went on with their act while E. A. Lake, the manager, had the body of the stricken drummer carried under the stage to a dressing room.

Having finished 21 years in the moving picture business, Daniel P. Wine, pioneer moving picture man of Harrisonburg, Va., will give up the operation of the New Virginia theatre in that city, which was built in 1913, and devote all his time as secretary of the Shenandoah Valley, Inc.

The New Virginia has been leased by Weinberg and Sacks, who also operate the Staunton, Lexington and Clifton Forge. The lease runs for a period of ten years and the rent will be $5,000 per year. The seating capacity of the New Virginia is 1,000 persons and the new operators plan to spend about $20,000 on improvements. Mr. Wine started in the film business with a theatre seating 50 persons and there were only two small houses in Washington at the time each seating a little over 200 persons.

The upper lid of the left eye of J. M. Shellman, motion picture editor of the Baltimore Sun, is tinged a deep violet and bears a neat cut, at the present time. Shellman says he stooped over in the dark to pick up a book which had fallen from a table thereby causing the eye to come into contact with the corner of the table forcibly. All who have heard the story smile, some say he must have had an argument. However, Mrs. Shellman and their two children left for a summer resort on the Eastern Shore of Maryland Monday, July 6.

Following the performances of the first week in July, the Pantages Theatre in this city closed its doors to the public for two weeks, during which time approximately $100,000 was to be spent under the direction of Manager E. C. Bostick and Assistant Manager Rodney Pantages in the complete renovating, redecorating and remodeling of the house and stage. The theatre has been operating steadily for many years, and recently has been playing a twelve-hour vaudeville and picture policy which has made extensive repairs impossible. A gala reopening was being planned for the latter part of July, at which time a monster vaudeville program and first run picture program was to be offered.

Seth D. Perkins, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn exchange, left last week for a business trip into Eastern Washington and Montana, planning to stop off at Spokane, Walla Walla, Missoula and a number of the smaller cities and towns during his absence. While he was away the local office was under the direction of Mr. J. W. Parry, assistant manager and booker.

W. D. Farrell, owner and manager of the American Theatre at Sunnyside, Wash., was a recent visitor on Film Row, his first visit to this city in a number of weeks. Mr. Farrell booked and bought pictures for the next several weeks for his house, which is expected to be taken over by Jensen-Von-Herberg early in 1926, according to plans recently announced.

A. J. Sullivan, office manager of the Producers Distributing Corporation exchange, spent a few days on the road last week on a business trip to a number of the smaller towns in the Northern part of this state. He was expec ed to return to the local office early in July to confer with Manager Charles E. Feldman.

R. C. Hill, rapid fire salesman of Manager A. H. Huot's Film Booking Office exchange, returned to Seattle last week after an absence of several days in Northern Washington and British Columbia. Mr. Hill reported that "a good time was had by all."

Albany

IMPORTANT changes in the sales force of the Fox exchange in this city have taken place during the past week. Fred Robke has been assigned to cover the northern section of the state, while Joseph Schneider, a newcomer to this region and who hails from the Fox branch in Charlotte, N. C., has replaced William J. Mahoney along the southern tier. Charles Walder, manager of the exchange, was in New York for four days last week in connection with covering the key cities of this section. Mr. Walder's children are spending the summer at a camp on Pontoosuc Lake. Miss Winifred Allen, who is the cashier at the Fox exchange, is spending a two weeks' vacation at a resort on Lake Champlain.

The Empire theatre in Syracuse features up the work of its orchestra, the newspaper advertisements in all instances stating that "Stolarevsky is conducting," while Paul H. Forster presides at the organ.

Miss Margaret Sullivan, well known along Film Row, and who handles the San Souci in Watervliet in a most able manner, left on Saturday for a vacation, a portion of which will be spent in Montreal.

Joseph Braff, who has been running the Lyric in Albany and the Hudson in Watervliet, informed all the exchanges last week that he would close the two houses for the summer. According to rumor, Mr. Braff may not reopen the theatres, but may return to the furniture business.

Leon Herman, salesman in the Universal exchange here, and a brother of Alec Herman, manager for First National, had a rather unusual experience last week on a trip between Tivoli and Madalin. It appears that when Mr. Herman reached Tivoli, there were no taxicabs available and the only means at hand to transport him to Madalin, where he was to see Exhibitor Roff, was a jackass. Having come thus far, Mr. Herman decided to see the thing through and traveled behind the animal to Madalin, only to find that Mr. Roff was not in the field for any more pictures at the present time.

There is one exhibitor in this city who is fond of swimming, and that is Walter Suckno, who is rapidly making a name for himself through the way he is handling the Albany and Regent theatres. On any warm evening Mr. Suckno can be found at Ford's Beach, indulging in a swim before hurying back to the theatres in time to handle the nine o'clock crowds.

Two Thorntons, Arthur S., of the Walden in Williamstown, Mass., and Tom, of the Orpheum, in Saugerties, were along Film Row during the past week. Arthur S. Thornton has been running the Walden for the past four years and according to his own story has never received so much as a single impertinent reply from the hundreds of students that flock to his house while Williams College is in session. When Mr. Thornton took over the theatre he decided to put a stop to the students smoking while watching the pictures. Today Mr. Thornton is one of the boys along with the student body as a whole, with the result that practically 99 per cent of the students patronize his house.

Harry Knappen, a special representative for Pathe, was in Albany during the past week. Leon Medem, manager for Pathe in this city, made a trip to Utica during the week, and Amos Leonard, a Pathe salesman, well known throughout this territory, appeared last week in a brand new car.

A rather novel idea of entertaining tourists who might camp over night with him is being advanced by George Roberts, who at one time ran the Grand in Scotia, and the Family theatres in Rotterdam and Burnt Hills. At the present time Mr. Roberts is out of the theatre business and is engaged in running a gasoline sattion and wayside restaurant near Amsterdam. Apparently he has been most successful as he has erected a new home in the immediate vicinity. There is a considerable space which Mr. Roberts plans to utilize as a camping ground for tourists. If they come in sufficient numbers he may set up a machine and provide a couple of reels of pictures nightly for their entertainment.

"Al" Bothner needs no announcing these days whenever he approaches one of the towns on his circuit in the Ford car which has replaced the time-honored vehicle that used to stand him in good stead when he was running theatres in Troy. Mr. Bothner has been connected with the Smalley circuit for some time past and covers a great deal of territory in going from town to town where the theatres are located. Friends along Film Row declare that Mr. Bothner has already driven the car such distances that with a rattle and a bang, his coming is known beforehand. At any rate Mr. Bothner is one of Mr. Smalley's right hand men and is making exceptionally good in his new position.

The Dutchess county fair this fall will be handled by a couple of exhibitors from that county, these being F. E. Chase, of Pine Plains, and Frank L. Asher, who runs the Star in Rhinebeck. The two men are already as busy as can be in arranging for what is generally regarded as one of the biggest county fairs in the entire state.

Ollie Stacey, of the Majestic, in Albany, is wondering these days if it will ever stop raining. No sooner does he book a fight picture than it starts to rain, giving him a bad break nine times out of ten.

At the Robbins-Eckel theatre in Syracuse, movie tests were taken during the afternoon and evening of July 8, and attracted plenty of attention in that city.

George Bunny, brother of John Bunny, appearing in George Tilford production "Without Mercy" for Producers Dist. Corp.

The iron mines at Port Henry will resume in the near future, an announcement that means hundreds of dollars to Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward, who has a house in Port Henry that has managed to struggle along during the last year or so while the mines have been down.

Fred Myers, of the Mark Strand in Albany, is wondering these days just how much of an honor it is to be elected as a delegate from this city to the state convention of the Knights of Pythias. The convention is slated for Albany later on this summer. While other delegates will enjoy long trips with all their expenses met, in coming to Albany, Delegate Myers will hoof it down the street to the convention hall.

It looks like a big meeting of the Arbitration Board on July 20, the first one that has been held so far this month. It is said that there are thirty or forty cases to come up before the Board and if such proves the case, the session will be an all day affair.

A big sign adorns the property recently purchased by the Strand interests in Albany, and which will be razed to make way for the new $500,000 motion picture theatre which will be erected on the site. The theatre will be under the personal management of Uly S. Hill, according to the banner's announcement.

Amateur nights are continuing at both the Rose theatre in Troy, and the Albany theatre in Schenectady.

A new business block is in course of erection directly adjoining the State theatre in Schenectady. Thus far the work has not interfered with the showing of the pictures, but when riveting gets under way it may be a different story.

James E. Roach, the new manager for the Farley theatres in Schenectady, does not believe in cutting down his newspaper advertising in the summer time. Instead of running smaller ads these days on the grounds that there is no business in the summer, Mr. Roach has increased his newspaper space five or six times above what it would be in normal times. Mr. Roach comes to the Farley circuit with the experience gained from five years in Kansas City, where he owned the Idle Hour as well as managed the Globe theatre. Mr. Roach is a firm advocate of young men as ushers in his theatres, saying that they hold their heads better than young women when it comes to handling crowds. With the opening of the fall season, Mr. Roach will install a large orchestra in the State theatre where an organ is now furnishing the music. He has dispensed with the orchestra at the Strand, at least for the time being, and using only the organ.

George Dwore, who works with his father in handling the Capitol and Cameo theatres in Schenectady, and who was recently elected as secretary of the Albany, is spending more of his time in Albany than in the past. In Schenectady, Thursday and Friday nights' business at the motion picture theatres is running ahead of that done on Saturday and Sunday night on account of the large number of automobiles and counter attractions which take the people into the country over the week-end. The new theatre which Proctor is erecting in Schenectady has progressed to the extent that the sidewalls are now going up and the work is going ahead as fast as can be expected.

Harry McNamara, of Valatie, was along Film Row during the past week, being accompanied by Mrs. McNamara, who is assisting with the bookings.

Of all the exhibitors in this part of the state, few are busier these days than John Myers, who is employed during the daytime at one of the banks, and then in the evening, spends his time in handling the Star in Schenectady and the Grand in Scotia, along with his daughter. Mr. Myers is also an organizer and district deputy for the Modern Woodmen of America and all in all finds the days too short.

It was so hot in Schenectady during the recent wave, that Miss Betty Feuer, of the Crescent decided to abandon the ticket booth for the time being, standing outside where she had a chance of catching any stray breeze as she handed out the tickets and took in the money.
